Lebanon Co. Farmer Gives Alternate Method of Ag Preservation

A large crowd attended the Conference on Rural Preservation In Pennsylvania at Franklin and Marshall College last Saturday.

A Lebanon County farmer proposed an alternative method of ag land preservation last week at the Conference on Rural Preservation in Pennsylvania at Franklin & Marshall College.

George B. Wolff speaking about the implications of agriculture on the environment said that:

I believe this method could preserve agricultural land while at the same time saving money for municipalities. In addition it would recharge our local ground water table, which I feel is probably one the most important things we can do. One of the major problems we have confronting agriculture is the need for additional agriculture land to spread excess nutrients. All the blame for overloading of nutrients in our waterways has been placed on agriculture. I have a feeling that that's not all fair. Residential communities also contribute. Mainly as a result from leaking underground septic tanks and improperly operating septic systems. Dr. Frank Leader from U.S. Extension at a recent presentation was talking about rust-leaking underground storage tanks. He felt that a bigger problem than the leaking underground petrolium tanks were the leaking underground tanks commonly known as septic tanks. He said that right after World War II thousands of round metal tanks were burried with a life expectancy of 25 years. Here we are 45 years later, and they are still being used. Where municipalities have concentrated septic systems they are having more and more problems contributing to more and more high nitrate levels in the ground water. This creates the situation that will eventually force

Watch for next week's edition for the beginning of our in-depth account of the dairy industry.

Solids Not Fat Discussed

BY KATHY E. GILL
Special to Lancaster Farming

FT. LAUDERDALE — Dairy farmer options on multiple component pricing can often be predicted by the color of their herds. But industry opinions on the same subject are far less uniform and demonstrate that the subject is far more complex than apparent at first glance.

In a session on nonfat solids standards and testing at the second annual US Dairy Forum, former Maryland and Virginia General Manager Jim Click opened the session with the comment "we've been down this road before."

He was referring to past symposia and other producer discussions debating the merits of producer pay prices based upon milk component other than butterfat And, as he pointed out, past discussions have not made overwhelming inroads into the issue.

Dr. David Barbano of Cornell related results of a milk composition study which only adds to the complexity of the issue. The study, which analyzed milk samples from 50 plants in 19 states across the country, demonstrated that there is tremendous variety in total solids, percent of fat, percent of protein and percent of all solids-not-fat.

In his presentation, Dr. Barbano assured the technical people in the audience that all testing was done in one centralized laboratory. The fact that he prefaced his survey results with such an announcement was a clue to one factor holding up pricing on nonfat solids.

Major regional differences in milk composition affect attempts to standardize samples. For example, the annual average for nonfat solids is 8.7 percent. In the West, that figure rises to 8.8 percent and in the Mid-Atlantic it drops to 8.65 percent. The range on any given farm, however, can be as great as 6.6 percent to 10.0 percent.

Moreover, the Mid-Atlantic has one of the lowest protein levels in any region of the country - 3.22 percent compared to the West's 3.33 percent. Even the Deep South falls in at 3.26 percent.

A more debilitating problem, however, lies in the test itself. Or the tests themselves.

Put simply, there are too many tests available.

For each component, including butter, there is more than one way a laboratory can ascertain its percentage of milk volume. But the tests do not necessarily provide the same percentages, even for the same milk sample. Thus the stumbling block.

If farmer Jones is paid for nonfat solids using test A, and farmer Smith is paid using test B, it is likey that their milk checks will not accurately reflect the variations in the milk composition.

California-based Randall Young, of Dairy and Food Labs in San Francisco, told the group that in the market, the state sets prices and determines which testing methods will be used to pay those prices. Moreover, by motion of 50 percent of the producers shipping to any one plant, the producers may force the plant to use a third party test for payment.

But can such a mandated uniformity be reached across the US?

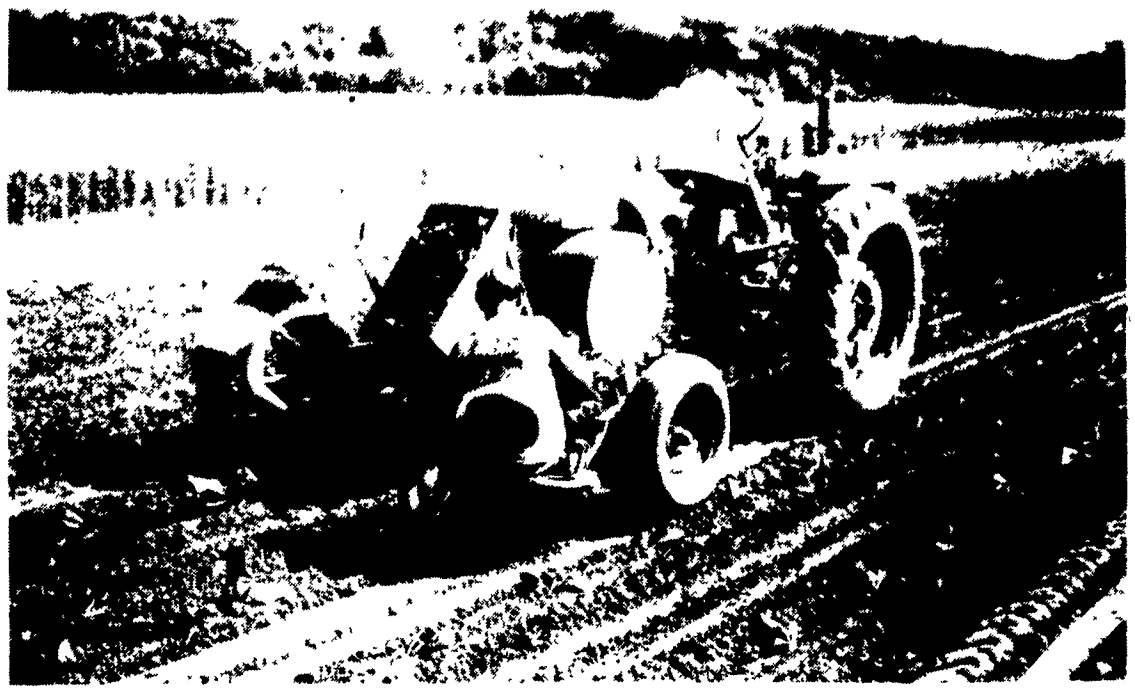
Not if opinions expressed at this Forum accurately reflect the industry.

In addition to grappling over the technical issues of determining just what is in each milk sample, the Forum also touched on the issues of increasing nonfat solids percentages in fluid milk.

Such a move was heartily opposed by most fluid processors. However, Gary Korsmeier of California Milk Producers Association attributed California's higher standards to increased milk consumption.

"Consumers are willing to pay for a better-tasting, more nutritious product," he asserted. "Few of us would have guessed a few years ago that consumers are after taste and not necessarily just price. The growth of the gourmet ice cream market is a good example."

However, processors remain stuanchly opposed to nationwide increases in the standards for nonfat solids in fluid milk. Nevertheless, the agree in principle to paying on protein or all solids for milk used in cheese, ice cream or powder.



Tobacco Planting Progresses

Tobacco planting is progressing nicely in Lancaster County. The nice rains last week prepared the soil and the warm weather grew the plants rapidly. Don and Dawn Rohrer on the planter and Mrs. Rohrer guiding the tractor along the contours on the family farm off Limevalley Road had already planted two acres by late Thursday afternoon when Everett Newswanger, Managing Editor caught up with the planting operation. The Rohrer family expect to be about half done planting by the end of today.

Philadelphia Eggs

Thursday, May 29, 1986
Report Supplied by USDA

Market Comment: Prices continued to trend lower on all sizes. Demand was light to fair and generally unaggressive at all levels of distribution. Graded supplies ranged adequate or available, particularly mediums and large. Gradable supplies at local and distant production points were currently in excess of packer needs, and breakers offered little option, as most limited receipts in anticipation of lower asking prices for breaking stocks.

Prices to retailers: sales to volume buyers, consumer grades white eggs in cartons delivered store door:

A Extra Large 61-67; A Large 59-65; A Medium 44-48½.

Delmarva Poultry

Thursday, May 29, 1986

Market Comment: Demand for ready to cook whole birds was generally disappointing, and offerings remained available at negotiable terms. Inquiry for parts was also disappointing, and the bulk of trading on most items was at discounts to yesterday's pricing. Less than trucklot asking prices were two to three cents lower at 58-65 cents. Live supplies remained at least fully adequate. Weights were in full range, but mostly desirable to heavier than desired. Slaughter schedules were moderately heavy. The undertone continued weak.

Estimated slaughter of broiler fryers in Delmarva:

Estimated 5/29 2,017,000; Actual 5/22 1,958,000.

Actual 5/27 1,937,000.

Average Weights 5/27 4.44, 5/20 4.40.

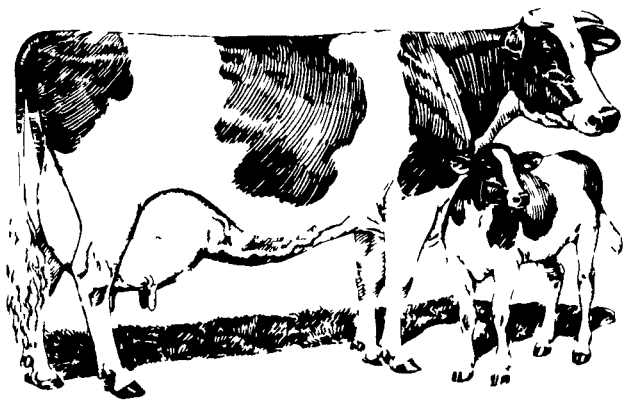
IMPROVE HERD HEALTH



28¢ Per Day - provides her with a daily diet specifically formulated for pre-freshening cows.

Pennfield Dry Cow Program

The 60 day period before freshening is a most important time in the life cycle of the cow. During the period she will "store-up" vitamin, mineral, and energy reserves which she will draw on during her following peak of lactation. Over 50% of her calf weight will devleop during this period, and being a good mother, she will supply nutrients to her calf before she will rebuild her own body reserves.

Good dairymen have seen that proper feeding management during this critical-period, means easier calving, better appetite during early lactation, and cows breed back better because they have nutritional reserves to draw on during peak lactation.

Balanced Nutrition Is The Key

A properly formulated dry cow program allows the dairyman to "control" the nutrient intake of the cow. Calcium and phosphorus levels must be properly maintained and forages should be checked for protein, energy, calcium and phosphorus.

OPINION

Stress Down On The Farm

We like to think that people who live on top of each other in the city need to get out to our farm country to find relief from their stress. But with the economic squeeze placed on farmers these days, we've got some stress right down on the farm. And these stresses are not reserved only for the marginal farmer or poor managers.

In the study of Farm Families Facing Financial Stress, Harold Capener, Professor of Rural Sociology at Cornell University called these farm families the "Cream of the crop". Unlike many of the farmers who left farming during the last 20 years, these farmers in the study were capable and dedicated. They had very promising children. They were social, civic and religious leaders in their communities. Often they got into farming or expanded their farm operation a few years ago when everything looked promising. Now when the economy has changed they find themselves highly leveraged and under financial stress.

Not all farmers handle stress alike. Some farmers feel challenged by problems and others fear them. According to James E. Van Horn, Family Sociology Extension Specialist at Penn State, the major reasons for different reactions to stress are a farmer's perception of the situation, his tolerance of how much stress he can live with and his skills for strategies on how to cope with the stress.

How events are interpreted will affect the reaction to stress. In order for stress to occur, the farmer must see or perceive the situation as stressful in the first place. Stress is "in the eye of the perceiver." For example, one farmer may view a broken arm as annoying and a major setback to production. Another farmer may see himself or herself as a very fortunate person in that nothing more than the arm was broken.

A farmer's feelings on a particular problem depend on his or her whole belief system. If a farmer views farming as unrewarding, each new stress is viewed in this light and seen as adding one new element to the already troublesome burden. However, if farming is seen as basically challenging and rewarding, stresses will be viewed as less severe.

Stress tolerance refers to a farmer's capacity to withstand stress or the amount of stress the farmer can tolerate before abilities are seriously impaired. Farmers differ greatly in the amount and types of stress, both physical and mental, they can handle. Prolonged exertion and fatigue that would be only mildly stressful to a young farmer may prove very difficult for an older farmer or someone with a heart defect. Emergencies, delays, and other problems that a confident farmer can take in stride may be a stumbling block for one who feels less confident or more troubled.

Coping with stress or solving a problem involving stress will depend on the skills the farmer has to solve it, according to Van Horn. The greater the skill, the less severe the stress. A well-trained farmer may be able to turn a profit even in the most marginal of situations; whereas one with less training may not be able to manage as successfully and become hopelessly frustrated.

But the farmer's actual level of skill is not the whole story–the way a farmer views his or her capabilities is important too. If the farmer feels generally self-confident and expects to solve a problem successfully, the stress will not be as severe even if it is a difficult problem. Skills also include those healthy things a farmer can do when feeling stressed. We may not think of "taking a walk" as being much of a skill, but it is when we are dealing with a stressful situation. The skill is "learning from past experiences to get away from a stressful problem for 20 or 30 minutes." The farmer says "I must take a walk, relax and clear my head." That's the skill part of walking.

Stress management consists of activities or strategies that assist farmers in avoiding unnecessary stress or coping with it. It also helps the farmer to better withstand the pressures and conflicts which are an inevitable part of life.

There is no "one and only" method of managing stress. Farmers should use a variety of ways to deal with stress.

Farmers who are successful stress managers seem to share these characteristics:

– Self-awareness–they know their strengths, skills, and weaknesses. They plan for the future. "They never bite off more than they can chew."

– A variety of techniques–they utilize many stress-reducing techniques as the situation dictates.

– Many interests–they are able to draw on several sources for personal satisfaction–hobbies, recreation, family.

– Have active and productive habits–they make things happen, they practice stress management during the bad and good times.

– Support–they develop friendships with others for help and comfort during periods of stress.

One way to manage your psychological and physical well-being is to have people you can turn to for emotional support. This support might come from family, church members, friends, or other farmers who have experienced the kind of stress you are experiencing. Since emotional support involves give-and-take, try to check yourself when you begin to withdraw or become angry and defensive. Try to support other people in addition to receiving support from them. Support comes in many forms. A brief "chat" with a friend may be all that you or your friend needs.

Diet influences a person's ability to cope with stress. Elevated blood cholesterol levels, combined with hypertension or high blood pressure, increase your chances of stroke and heart attack.

Caffeine stimulates the sympathetic nervous system and may promote even more nervousness and tension. Be moderate in your consumption of coffee, tea, soft drinks, and drugs containing caffeine.

Although alcohol and drugs are common ways of dealing with stress, they can be addictive and tend to affect or "treat" only the symptoms of the problems. They mask the cause of stress without

To Be Aware of Fly Build-up

There is considerable increase in fly population in many of our operations this spring. One of the reasons is the build-up of resistance to materials presently used.

Your fly control program should integrate several different control techniques and insecticides, if you are going to be successful. Flies will become resistant to a particular insecticide if exposed to the same material several times in succession. Resistance to the synthetic pyrethroids (Ectiban, Atroban, Hard Hitter, etc.) has already been shown.

Some of our poultry producers have found that flies are more tolerant to Larvadex than they were a year or two ago. For best results, use a wide variety of insecticide formulations (space sprays, mist sprays, baits, residual sprays, etc.) and different classes of insecticides (synthetic pyrethroids, carbomates and organophosphates). In fact, Dr. Clarence Collison, entomologist at Penn State, suggests that if you have not used a material for two or three years, you may want to give it a try again.

In addition to using appropriate insecticides when necessary, it is important to develop an effective manure management program to keep the number of fly breeding sites to a minimum.

To Practice Bio-Security

Livestock and poultry diseases continue to be a threat to farmers. I still believe that in too many cases the farmer brings the infection home to his own animals and poultry. Are you careful about the footwear worn when attending the public stock yards or sales barns? Most of these places are an outlet for animals with some infection; the chances of picking up these organisms on your boots or shoes are great. Even though the public places are often disinfected, there is still danger of infection.

We urge farmers to be very careful with their sanitary habits. The same is true when using public trucks to transport animals; be sure they are clean and well disinfected. Don't be guilty of bringing home infection to your own animals.

To Clip Pastures

Mowing permanent pastures at this time of year is a very good idea. Many of the plants will be heading out and some will go to seed; this means that the plants should be mowed to help control weeds and to encourage new growth of grass.

Livestock will consume the dry clippings. Pastures should be clipped several times during the season. In addition, the clipped area will look much better to the general public as they travel through the country.

To Reduce Rural Crime

Rural crime has become a sad fact of life. Most facts and figures that we read indicate an increase in rural crime. There are many things you can do to "make crime more trouble that it's worth." That would include installing and using locks, bringing your equipment inside, or putting it in a well-lighted area at night. Also, do not keep loading chutes near gates. One of the most important things you can do is to establish "crime watch" with your neighbors.

You also may be able to borrow an engraving tool from your local police department to mark your equipment with your driver's license number. Do not use your Social Security number because it is not retrievable.

FARM FORUM
OUR READERS WRITE

Dear Editor:

I have read and seen a lot about the vanishing American farmer. But what I can't understand is why they, the farmers, try and stand alone during these troubled times.

My family and I were not born or raised on a farm, but we always wanted a farm. About seven years ago we bought what would be a gentlemen's farm. We have 13 brood sows and we sell our piglets to our neighbor. We would love to go full-time but as with anything, financially we couldn't.

The point I'm trying to make is why can't farmers work together as a group? They could buy land together, share equipment, rotate investment in planting seasons, and share the bounty, which to me, would bring overhead way down.

I would like to see an in-depth survey taken and an in-depth article on this subject. I think Lancaster Farming is a great newspaper but don't forget we are not all dairy farmers. Some of us are pork producers.

I believe we are our brothers keeper, but I also think the American farmer has forgotten about that.

If the American farmer doesn't form a solidarity among themselves, the big conglomerates who buy all these farms will take over.

Sincerely,
Frank J. Cossmay

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

BY LAWRENCE W. ALTHOUSE

THE "ONLY" COMPLEX
June 1, 1986

Background Scripture: Jeremiah 1.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 139: 1-6.

When God has something for us to do, it seems we are almost always "only" something — "only one person," "only a layperson," "only an ordinary person," and so on. Called to be God's prophet, Jeremiah responded with "Ah, Lord God! Behold, I do not know how to speak, for I am only a youth" (1:6). Moses had been "only" an 80-year-old man: "Who am I that I should go to Pharoah, and bring the sons of Israel out of Egypt?" (Exodus 4:11). Isaiah had been "only" an unworthy man: "Woe is me...for I am a man of unclean lips..." (Isaiah 6:5).

BEYOND "ONLY"

None of these responses — nor those that you and I make when God needs us — are untrue so far as they go. Yes, we are too young, too old, too unworthy, and all the rest. But when God has a job for us to do, he makes it clear that there is something beyond the "only" facts of our lives. God gave Moses the something else he needed for his task; Isaiah, too. And to a quivering Jeremiah he said: "Do not say, 'I am only a youth'; for to all to whom I send you you shall go..." (1:7).

By ourselves we may not be able to do what he wants. But, we are not by ourselves: "Be not afraid of them, for I am with you to deliver you..." (1:8). God never calls us to a task which is impossible, because he always offers himself with that call: "Behold, I have put my words in your mouth" (1:9).

At this point you may be saying to yourself, "Well, that's nice to know if God ever calls me to do something (Of course, I've been around for some time and he hasn't asked me to do anything yet!)." Don't you believe it! If you're old enough to read these words, you're old enough to have gotten God's call to do lots of somethings. The problem is probably, not that he hasn't called you, but that you haven't been listening. I can say that, not because I know you, but because I know that God doesn't bring anyone in this world for a free ride. There's always something to do for God.

IN THE WOMB

God told Jeremiah that his call to the prophecy was something that had been in the picture from the very beginning: "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, and before you were born I consecrated you; I appointed you a prophet." (1:5). What God said to Jeremiah, I believe he says to each of us. We may not be called to be prophets, but we are each of us created for a purpose — God's purpose — and we cannot ever be really satisfied until we have discovered that purpose and set ourselves to make it a reality.

God made you for a purpose, too. Do you know what it is? Don't let the "only" complex get in the way.

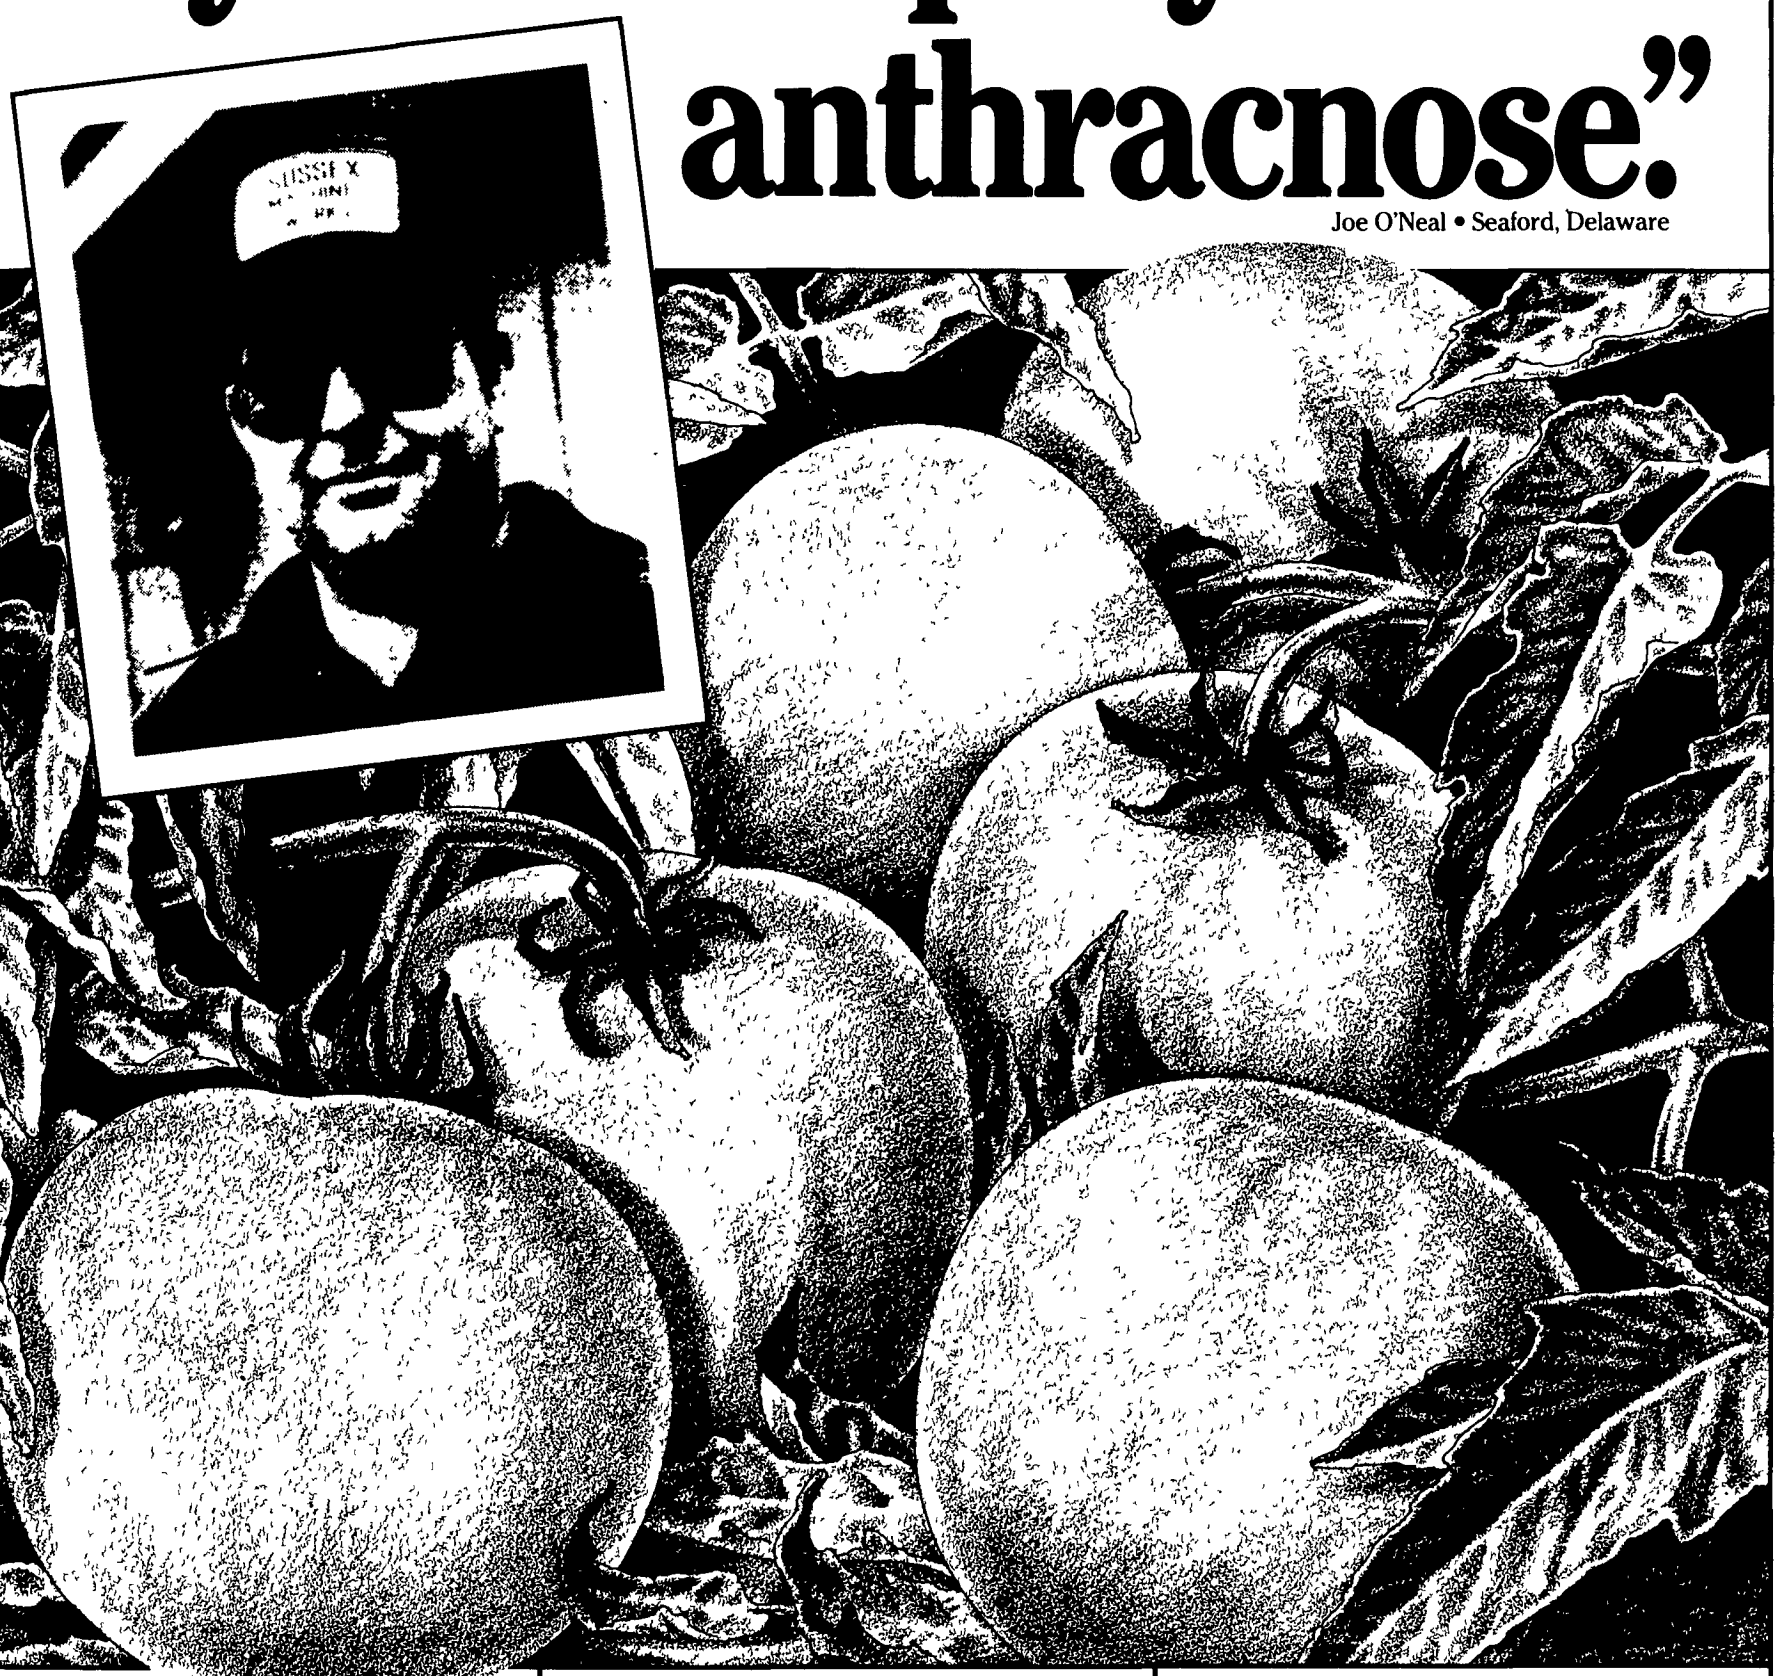
"My Bravo sprays beat anthracnose."

Joe O'Neal • Seaford, Delaware



When you listen to Joe O'Neal tell it, he's got some pretty solid reasons for counting on Bravo® fungicide.

"I know one thing, it's a lot easier to prevent anthracnose than to try and cure it.

"We spray Bravo on a 7-day interval and stay with it. Been doing that for five years now. And I can say this, if you start your Bravo on time, you'll beat anthracnose regardless of the pressure.

"It's foolish to cut back and try to save a buck because if you lose the fruit, you don't harvest the fruit. As far as I'm concerned, Bravo is the cheapest of any trip across the field."

For tough tomato diseases like anthracnose and blight, there's no better fungicide than Bravo.

As Joe O'Neal puts it, "I look at Bravo as an asset."

Bravo. Because you give it all you've got.

Increase Egg Size

Decrease Egg Size

At times, you could increase your egg income 6¢ per dozen by increasing egg size one percent.

At other times, implementing feeding and management practices that could result in a 3% decrease in egg size can save as much as 2¢/dozen.

Most of the time, your hens do not produce the most profitable egg size. Your unique market conditions dictate your most profitable egg size.

If you could improve profits by slightly changing egg size, would you?

Test your farm financial health

Your business skills are put to the test every day. You make decisions and weather the outcomes. If the information you need to manage your farm isn't at your fingertips, you search it out. But where do you need to fine-tune your management during these tough economic times? Where can you cut costs or change emphasis to improve your profit picture? Are you going to be able to get that operating loan that will get you through until fall? Is your farm going to return enough to meet your business as well as personal obligations? Do you know how your farm measures up financially?

A quiz distributed to farmers through the Maryland Cooperative Extension Service helps answer some of these questions and pinpoints strengths and weaknesses in a farmer's management skills and financial condition. The quiz consists of eleven questions that focus on a balance sheet, an income statement, a cash flow analysis, and enterprise records. A farmer is evaluated on the actual financial condition as well as his or her familiarity with the operation of the farm.

Here's the quiz to test the financial health of your farm, find your strong points and discovedr any possible areas for improvement. Choose a response and enter that number in the blank.

(2) part of
(3) all of

11 I have_____
(1) analyzed my financial condition and my farm appears to be stable for the future
(2) analyzed my financial condition as being poor and I am considering leaving farming within the next three years
(3) not analyzed my financial condition but I am determined to continue farming even if it results in eventual bankruptcy

Your total score on the quiz can be matched with the following guidelines

11-12 points Your financial situation is probably well under control

13-15 points Your responses indicate several areas to concentrate on and improve

16-22 points Prioritize the areas you'll work on, then tackle one or more immediately

23-33 points: You've indicated many areas to improve Help from a lender or financial adviser could speed your improvement timetable

34-40 points: Check the number of times you've given a "don't know" response Become familiar with these areas of your farming operation, then work on improvement with the help of a financial adviser

If your score shows problems, who returned you're certainly not alone Many farmers returned the quiz anonymously, showed that the "farm crisis" is no stranger Farmers are encouraged to pay close attention to their financial health and develop a good working relationship with their lenders Seminars and workshops on farm management provided by the Cooperative Extension Service provide a good source of information for brushing up on management skills.-- Dale Johnson and Dick Levins

Split fertilizer applications save money and environment

NEW YORK, NY – Farmers who apply all their fertilizer at once will not get the best return on their money, Lewis Coalter, vice president of sales, Arcadian Corporation, recently told a group of agribusiness investment managers assembled in Des Moines.

"Researchers estimate that the average crop utilizes only 50 to 60 percent of broadcast nitrogen. That means almost half of a farmer's nitrogen investment has absolutely no effect on his yield. The rest is lost through leaching or denitrification," Coalter explained.

He recommended split applications of fertilizer through starters, banding, side-dressing and other techniques to "decrease the percentage of applied plant food that is lost, and increase percentage of that used by the crop. For years, farmers have been programmed to consider cost per acre when determining fertilizer budgets. To more accurately figure the bottom line, they should be looking at cost per bushel produced," Coalter said, as a means of survival in a depressed farm economy.

He urged improvement of the grower's "fertilizer efficiency ratio," a number obtained, for example, by dividing the number of bushels of corn harvested per acre into the number of pounds of nitrogen applied per acre. The lower the number, the better the efficiency ratio, the return on investment, and the farmer's cash flow.

Coalter said more efficient use of fertilizer is possible through greater skills involving "TPC - timing, placement and concentration of nutrients." He reported that liquid fertilizers, which lend themselves more readily to split applications, are gaining market share at the expense of anhydrous ammonia and dry fertilizers, "due to better TPC and because they are more adaptable to new cultural techniques, such as conservation tillage, to control nutrient losses.

"The idea is to make fertilizer available to the crop instead of letting it go down the tile line. Two of today's major objectives - controlling nutrient losses and achieving high, profitable yields - complement each other. They make sense from both economic and environmental standpoints," Coalter declared.

Assuring the accuracy of soil tests

NEWARK, DE – A soil test is useful only if it's accurate. And the key to accuracy is quality control in the laboratory which analyzes the sample. This ensures that the numbers generated give reproducible results which correlate with research. Without this assurance, fertilizer recommendations based on the test are meaningless.

A recent sample exchange among mid-Atlantic area soil laboratories shows that University of Delaware Agricultural Experiment Station soil test results agree closely with those from university labs in Maryland, New Jersey and Virginia. This should reassure farmers who use these labs. Scientists at all four labs belong to a regional soil test work group established in 1975. Soil specialists from Pennsylvania, West Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina also belong to the group.

Once a year the labs analyze identical soil samples and compare results to check accuracy. Several commercial labs in the area participate as well.

Besides reporting results of a soil analysis, as part of this quality control process each laboratory also submits a set of fertilizer recommendations based on that analysis for common crops grown in the region. Members of the group then compare testing procedures and discuss the reasons for their recommendations.

"When we differ," says Dr. J. Thomas Sims, head of the University of Delaware soil laboratory, "we try to find out why." Soil variability and problems in soil sampling are the main reasons test results differ. Fertilizer recommendations–even those based upon identical results–may vary because of different concepts of plant nutrient needs and attitudes on the economics of fertilizer use. There are far fewer differences now than in 1975, and group members continue to work toward greater uniformity.

In the days of cheap fertilizer it was common to advise farmers to apply potassium and phosphorus on even high testing coastal plain soils, as a kind of yield insurance. Since then, Sims says research at the Delaware Agricultural Experiment Station and elsewhere has demonstrated that this practice is often unnecessary.

Soil test interpretations may also differ, depending on how a crop is grown. Thus, though phosphorus can often be omitted on corn, in certain situations such as no-till it may be useful as a starter fertilizer to stimulate early seedling growth–especially in cold soils. Phosphorus may also help achieve high corn yields under irrigation.

"This year," Sims says, "all our Delaware recommendations are for specific crop yield goals, based on soil texture and whether the crop will be irrigated."

Because fertilizer is one of the most costly production inputs, the soil scientist suggests that, once farmers receive their soil test reports, they consider having these interpreted by more than one source–just as they would get another opinion before deciding on a course of medical treatment.

Membership in the mid-Atlantic soil test work group is a great help to the University of Delaware soil testing program, Sims says. It provides a means of group members to share much relevant information which can be applied to local crops and soil conditions, thus stretching research dollars at each participating institution. This kind of cooperation is possible because of similarities among many of the region's coastal plain soils.

HAY! Where's the leaf?

If your livestock could talk, they might be asking that question. You could be needlessly losing up to half of the ALFALFA and CLOVER leaves because of leaf shatter. Some rotary head tedders can beat much of the protein-rich leaves off the stems - leaving them in the field. (That can cost you money in lost nutritional value because 80% of the protein is in the leaves.)

Moser Named National Finalist in Holstein Competition

BALLY — Long distance is the next best thing to being there. This statement is especially true for Sandy Moser of Berks County, as she has been receiving good news by the phone lately.

At the beginning of May she received a long distance phone call at her college in Baltimore. Her mother was on the line to inform her that the Pennsylvania State Holstein office had just called to congratulate her on being named a semi-finalist in the National Distinguished Junior Member Awards competition.

Sandy Moser began her trek to the final 12 by winning the Pennsylvania title in February. Due to college commitments, however, she was unable to attend the State Holstein Convention, and the news of her winning was also relayed by a long distance call.

Moser recently completed her freshman year at Loyola College where she is majoring in English/creative writing, which is one of her loves.

Another one of her loves has been her Holsteins.

Upon learning of her prestigious accomplishment, Moser explains she was "really surprised." She thought that it was necessary to follow a prescribed list of achievements to be a national finalist. Moser was simply too busy with numerous other activities to complete the menu.

"Once I stopped thinking about it, that's when it happened; and I never expected Nationals," she relates.

"The book" was the basis for the judges' selection of Moser. "My book is always a little more personal than everybody else's," she said.

She credits her art background in creating a consistent, unique layout for her junior scrapbook. On the back of every separation for each section was a geometric design with black, white and red; giving her book that extra touch, the fruits of much labor. The finishing touches for her book was the last page where she included a story she had written.

Moser almost didn't compete this year, due to the extensive amount of time needed to compile a winning book. This required time to come home from college and fill in the book.

It was her list of published stories that Moser thinks might have swayed the judges in her favor. "I think they looked at my book and said 'This is something different that we've never seen before.'"

Her Holsteins, the subject of "the book" and a source for her writing, have also provided college tuition dollars.

Reluctantly, Moser has sold some of her Holsteins to finance her education. Plans are being made to sell a very good Pete daughter out of a Bootnik which Moser originally bought at the Exclusive Sale.

The Futurity is the next challenge for Moser during her tenure in the Junior Holstein Association. She is planning to win the Futurity with a recently fresh Cittamatt daughter from the Pete cow. "It's the last thing I want to do as a junior," Moser notes.

In addition to winning county and district shows with her Holsteins, Moser was a member of the Berks County 4-H Dairy Bowl team that won the National Championship in Kentucky last year.

"I guess we tried to psyche everyone out. It was our last year and we decided no one was stealing it from us since we couldn't come back again," she reflected.

Contests, such as dairy bowl and judging, have provided her with pleasant memories of her 4-H career. "There's just something, when you're all in it together, and you all know that one of us can win and I'm not going to care if it's not me and it's you. You even forget after awhile who won, and of course it doesn't matter because you're happy enough," Moser commented.

While still busy with the Dairy Bowl, Moser began her freshman year at college, which proved to be anything but dull. Next year, she adds, promises to be "a great and busy year."

Rising from the ranks of staff writer this past year, she will be an associate editor of Green and Gray, the college newspaper. Moser was on the editorial board for the Garland, a collegiate literary magazine, as well as a contributor to the Forum, a bi-yearly magazine that publishes the best essays of the semester.

Moser also finds time to work in the public relations department, which led to working on the volunteer chore and manning the phones during the college's phonathon.

A phone call led to another piece of good news for Moser at the end of the spring semester. An essay which she had prepared for the Baltimore Sun was accepted and printed on the Op-Ed page. Publication of this essay, which deals with attics and their contents, fills a goal Moser established for herself at the start of the semester. It will rank her as the youngest member of Loyola College to have something printed on that page.

This year she also broke "a biggie" with publication in Farm Journal. Other periodicals which have printed her poetry and short stories are Lancaster Farming, Hoard's Dairyman, Farm Women News, Dairy Illustrated, and the various local newspapers. This names just a few of the approximately 150 times she has been published.

Her farm oriented stories have drawn letters providing advice, compliments and an occassional request to correspond or marry, Moser mentioned. "It's fun. I get letters addressed to Mrs. Moser since I never make the distinction and I often talk about Dad — referring to him as the man who shares my name," she added.

Moser originally started writing at age 5 "to make my dad laugh. When I was little, I always thought he worked too hard," she explains. One of her early subjects was a heifer that was "pretty stupid" and provided sufficient subject matter.

She writes when the idea strikes and records it on whatever is handy. At times, her writing equipment consists of cow towels and a breeding chart pen or an old newspaper. In the midst of a college party, or in the early hours of a day, she can be found penning a new idea.

In tenth grade Moser became serious about her writing. She credits her family for making writing "easy" and for their encouragement. Her father, LaVerne, has been a topic for many essays and her mother, Linda, first suggested Moser submit her works.

Last summer, she sang her way through Europe after winning a place with the American Music Abroad organization. She has continued her singing career by participating in the college choir for two semesters.

Prior to college, she and her brother, Mark, did all of the milking. Control of the breeding decisions for her cows remains with Moser, but she will accept her family's judgement when she is away.

Lalisa Holsteins is a family farm in the strictest sense. Major decisions are discussed by the entire family and the family works together to get the work done.

"Our family works together really well. I don't think we could complement each other anymore than we do now." she said, commenting on the individual talents of each family member.

Reflecting on her accomplishments, "I don't think I've ever done anything that I can say I wish I wouldn't have," Moser stated.

The following is a sample of Moser's writing expertise:

The Pain of Rain

The baler is all ready to make its journey to the field;
the hay is rolled and drying and it looks like a promising yield.

"Eight or nine wagons,"
Dad had said,
and here I must confess:
I hate putting hay away but Dad likes buying it even less.

It's been sunny for three days straight that's why we decided to mow it.
When the hay was fit to bale,
Mother Nature made plans to blow it.

So the hay lays in the field at least until this rainfall stops.
Noah may have had it bad,
but he wasn't harvesting crops.

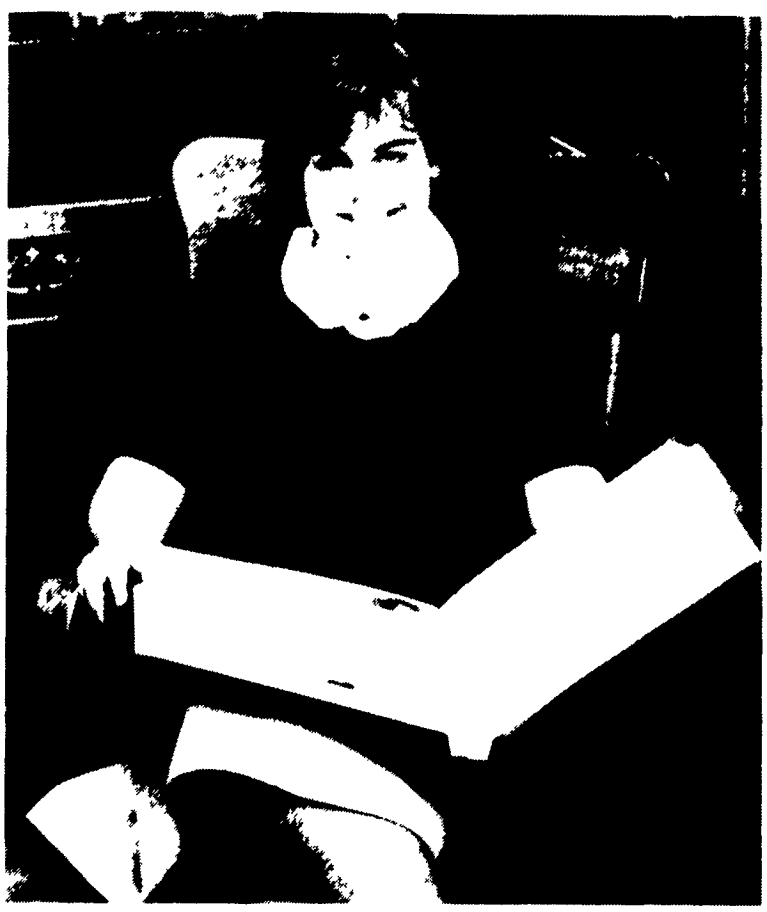
Sandy Moser, a national finalist for the Distinguished Junior Member of the Holstein Association, proudly shows one of her 4-H projects. Sandy plans to sell this very good Pete daughter, who has records up to 20,000, later this summer.

One of her duties at home is caring for the replacement herd.



Sandy reviews the scrapbook which contains clippings of the approximately 150 times her work has been published. Her writing has earned her such names as "Barnyard Poet," "Rural Rhymer," and "Bally Balladeer."

Acreage Reduction Programs Post 'Near Record' Signup

CREAMERY — Calling the preliminary figures "a near record signup," Eugene F. Thompson, ASCS state executive director, announced that over a quarter of the eligible farms in Pennsylvania have signed up 588,332 acres of feed grain and wheat bases under the 1986 acreage reduction programs.

The acreage required to be taken out of production and devoted to the Acreage Conservation Reserve totals 122,174 acres.

The enrolled acreage represents 46 percent of the 1,289,497 acres of total crop acreage bases established for these commodities. For the 1985 programs, 36 7 percent of the 1,244,822 acre crop acreage base was enrolled.

Base acreage enrolled in the program includes 499,079 acres of corn, 51,423 acres of wheat, 7,496 acres of barley, 28,065 of oats and 2,269 acres of grain sorghum.

Producers who participate in the acreage limitation programs agree to reduce their plantings by at least 20 percent for feed grains or 107 thousand acres; 25 percent for wheat, or 12.9 thousand acres. Winter wheat producers also had the options of reducing their wheat acreage by an additional five or ten percent for diversion payments. The special wheat diversion will take an additional 2,274 acres out of wheat production. This acreage must also be devoted to an acreage conservation reserve.

Nationally, producers have signed contracts to place 186.3 million acres of upland cotton, extra long staple cotton, feed grain, rice and wheat crop acreage bases in the 1986 programs.

The acreage to be taken out of production and devoted to the Acreage Conservation Reserve totals 43.9 million acres. The final ACR may be smaller, since total requirements are based on actual plantings. A final report of total acreage enrollment will be issued after June 1, 1986.

Registered Cows Equal Merchandising Success

BY GINGER SECRIST MYERS
Adams County Correspondent

MERCERSBURG — "If we didn't have registered cows, we wouldn't be in the business. Having registered Holsteins and being able to merchandise a few of the good ones has made all the difference to us," explains Jim Burdett of Windy-Knoll-View Farm, Franklin County, when evaluating his position in today's dairy business.

Jim and Nina Burdett and their sons, Justin, 7, and Kyle, 3, are a self-made dairy family that has achieved success in both the bulk tank and on the tanbark circuit. Their 64 registered Holsteins are rolling at 18,500 pounds of milk and 690 pounds of fat, making them one of the highest producing herds in the county.

This past spring they exhibited the first-place senior calf, first-place junior yearling, and the first place junior best three females at the State Spring Holstein Show.

Transplants from Montgomery County, Maryland, the Burdetts moved to their present 140 acre farm in 1975. Prior to relocating, they were farming on rented ground in Maryland, but had the land on a 60 to 90 day notice.

Wanting to escape the Washington D.C. sprawl that was just thirty miles from their farm, and seeking a more secure cropland situation, the newly-married Burdetts moved their herd of 17 Ayrshires and five Holsteins north to Franklin County.

Nina, who was raised with beef and horses, really hesitated moving into a dairy situation. However, today Nina handles the milking duties and cares for the calves daily.

Jim, who is a protege of the Johnny Morris school of dairy cattle judging, was a dedicated farmer from the very start.

They began their farm with Ayrshires as they had been Jim's 4-H projects, but they soon became disenchanted with their cows. In his herd Burdett had four National Show Champions, but couldn't command a selling price higher than $2,500 for any of them. By 1978 the Ayrshires were sold and the Holsteins moved in.

"We didn't spend a lot for any of our Holstein. We bought registered cows for about $600 to $700. One night I bought three cows that were due to go to the butcher the next day. One of those eventually scored excellent and the other two both scored very good," Burdett remembers.

Since 1980, the Burdetts have made only an occassional purchase of an individual when they thought the type and numbers were right for the price.

Their move to registered Holsteins has garnered for them the recognition of being solid dairy managers who still breed for exceptional type. "Everything we do here has to pay," Burdett states.

Jim and Nina Burdette pose with just a few of the trophies and awards their show-winning Windy-Knoll-View Holsteins have netted for them. They credit showing and the registered business for keeping them enthused about dairying.

The Burdette bred and exhibited this winning senior calf at the 1986 Spring Holstein Show. Half interest in Windy-Knoll-View Lotsa Quality was recently sold to Lyle-Haven Holsteins, Vermont.

"We milk in a 16-stall tie barn with eight in-place units. We don't have a fancy feeding program, just high moisture corn and supplement — fed twice a day, 14 pounds of hay a day per cow, and haylage and corn silage fed four times a day. We also plan our matings to maximize profits; and we keep everything cost effective here," he added.

In reflecting on their showring successes for the past 10 years, the Burdetts both agree that while showing is a costly venture, it has also been profitable. It has served as the back door into some very lucrative advertising for both their show winners and the cow families they are derived from.

The Windy-Knoll-View prefix has been carried by nine homebred excellents, four Holstein Spring Show winners in the past two years, as well as various other state and county show champions.

To breed this type of Holstein, Jim reveals, "Type is my number one priority in a mating. I want to improve the cow on type and then cover my bases on production." Bulls that are presently used in their breeding program include: Gold, Valiant, Ned Boy, Starbuck, and Warden. Twenty-five percent of the herd is bred to young sires that the Burdetts feel have excellent cow families behind them.

Burdett feels that the registered breeder is caught in a "Catch 22" situation when mating cows for today's market. While he agrees that the dairyman should keep the index numbers in mind, he also feels that a breeder should capitalize on matings from the best type bulls that will produce highly marketable show-type offspring.

He is quick to acknowledge that the number system is in place and should not be discarded; and he does have strong reservations as to its apparent lack of consideration for cow families.

Jim and Nina feel they will never catch-up on their numbers, but note the added income from merchandising show offspring is an asset to their cash flow.

Another factor he considers in mating is the bull's protein yield. While their Co-op does not presently pay for protein, the Burdetts do feel it is coming in the future.

Currently they ship their milk with Maryland-Virginia Cooperative. In 1981 they were named the Co-op's Outstanding Young Cooperators.

The Burdetts are anxiously anticipating this show season as one of their best. Jim reflects that investor money has probably blemished showing for the average breeder, particularly in the larger shows.

However, he is optimistic, stating, "I think that in five years the Eastern National Show will come back to the breeders and the 'funny money people' will be out of it. I try to give people a fair deal in the showring and when I sell them an animal."

Added Nina, "It just makes you feel good when your animal does well at the show or you talk to someone who is really pleased with the animal they bought from you."

Indexing How Top Dairymen Do It

BY DR. GEORGE
F.W. HAENLEIN
Extension Dairy Specialist
University of Delaware

NEWARK, Del. — Annual reports of DHIA records are an opportunity to evaluate progress on a dairy farm and to identify some of the underlying reasons for success. They can also help other producers see where they can make changes to improve their own dairy income. Recent annual Delaware DHIA meetings featured such reports, along with the usual awards for outstanding achievements.

One thing these records show is that it pays to keep high-producing cows longer because it reduces the high cost of replacements. The average age in most herds these days, unfortunately, is less than 5 years. This means at least one-fifth of your cows must be replaced with heifers each year.

At our 1986 DHIA annual meetings, four Delaware herds were honored for lifetime production of more than 7,000 pounds total milkfat in seven or more lactations, with more than 160,000 pounds of milk from cows over 9 years of age. Some of the high-producing cows in these herds aren't even purebred registered — they're just grade cows.

Other awards went to the producers in our state with the highest genetic merit cow indexes, honoring the combination of superior sires with genetically superior dams that produced genetically above-average cows. These cows now qualify as mothers for future A.I. sires — a good potential source of side income to supplement that from milk on these farms.

Farm visits and DHIA records reveal several other characteristics of above-average dairy herds in our region. Herd size tends to be larger in herds with higher annual milk and milkfat production per cow. And fat tests are one to two points higher, reflecting better roughage feeding programs. This is borne out by feeding records over the entire Northeast, which show that high-producing herds in this region receive significantly more silage and haylage per cow per year — as well as more concentrates, of course, because of their higher energy needs.

Nevertheless, the higher milkfat tests in these herds indicate that higher concentrate feeding is well-balanced with sufficient amounts of fiber in daily rations. A minimum of 17 percent crude fiber in the total daily ration is required to maintain at least a 3.6 percent average fat test.

In addition, supplements such as sodium bicarbonate, magnesium oxide, bentonite, cement dust, long fiber haylage and whole cotton seed are heavily used by above average herds to balance fiber in the ration.

DHIA records also show that our better herds typically tend to have less days open for all cows, less cows not bred 100 days after calving, shorter calving intervals, younger age of first-calf heifers, higher average age of cows and earlier stages of days in lactation.

Records for all 5,936 Holstein herds registered in the Northeast confirm the value of these reproduction parameters in identifying above-average herds. Very significant differences are also found in the level of proofs for service sires used in above-average herds here. Cow indexes, sire proofs, dam indexes and the indexes for recent and even current unborn calves differ significantly in favor of the top herds.

When you consider that each cow's performance is limited genetically to a certain ceiling, which is inherited by her offspring with a 25 percent predictability, it should be of high financial interest to dairy farmers to invest only in bull semen with above-average proofs and above-average reliability for mating, as long as the price makes economic sense.

Remember — profits from good feeding and management can come only from cows that genetically merit such treatment. The average difference between the top half of dairy herds in this area and the bottom half is 3,500 pounds of milk, with an overall range of 10,000 pounds of milk. Last year, Delaware's top herds averaged 653 pounds of fat in 17,647 pounds of milk compared to the lower half of our herds, which averaged only 517 pounds fat in 14,366 pounds milk.

The producers who own these above-average herds appear to be making skillful use of genetics, feeding, reproduction, heifer raising and cow longevity. They also keep good daily and monthly records.

Let's see more of this kind of management. We need it to overcome these hard times on the dairy farm!

'Farm Spokespersons' take ag story to consumers

INDIANAPOLIS, In. — The farm economy, use of agrichemicals in food production and the future of the family farm are leading agricultural concerns of urban consumers, according to three national farm spokespersons.

The three Elanco Young Farmer Spokespersons for Agriculture — Floyd Beard, Rick Fruth and Patricia Mueller — addressed these and other consumer concerns about agriculture in a recent three-city tour.

The spokespersons met with media and consumers in Denver, Colorado; Portland, Oregon; and Los Angeles, California.

Although many farmers are facing financial difficulties, these farm spokespersons chose to emphasize the positive aspects of agriculture. They pointed out the importance of agriculture to all consumers by showing how the ag economy affects all consumers.

They pointed out that food in the United States is less expensive than anywhere in the world; that agriculture and related industries employ the largest number of people in the U.S. and help support the economy; and that our food quality and quantity are the best in the world. The spokespersons also answered questions and cleared up misconceptions about farming and the ag industry.

During the week-long media tour, the spokespersons brought these messages to an estimated audience of nearly six million. From January 27 to January 31, they conducted 22 media interviews, including six television, ten radio, two newspaper and two magazine.

In addition to the media interviews, the spokespersons communicated directly with urban consumers through informal visits to grocery stores in each city. There the spokespersons answered questions about farming, food prices, food safety and agrichemicals, plus other consumer concerns.

"Most of the consumers we met were pleased with food quality and thought that food prices were fair. Many however, did not understand why farmers are in a financial bind even though food prices have remained steady or risen," notes spokesperson Patricia Mueller.

"Generally, we found consumers very supportive of farmers," she adds. "Many asked what they could do to help with the current farm situation. We told them that awareness was very important and they should read up on agriculture issues and let their representatives in Congress know how they feel."

Spokesperson Rick Fruth also found a great deal of concern for farmers among urbanites.

"I think some of the media have overplayed certain aspects of the farm 'crisis'. I wanted them to know that it is not a hopeless situation, that the majority of farmers are in stable or good financial condition," he explains. While acknowledging the problems, Fruth tried to concentrate on the positive aspects about agriculture today.

As a beef producer, spokesperson Floyd Beard answered many consumer questions and concerns about beef quality and the use of antibiotics in beef production. "I tried to emphasize the stringent testing and regulations that beef must pass before it goes on the supermarket shelf.

"Beef producers have also been responsive to consumer demands for leaner beef. New USDA figures show that the cholesterol levels of lean red meat, pork and poultry are very comparable," Beard points out.

"Also, the American Heart Association, the National Cancer Institute and the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute all agree that red meat fits into their diet recommendations. Both the media and consumers we talked to were interested in this new information," Beard says.

The three spokespersons were selected in a contest last December at the National Young Farmers Educational Institute. The contest and media tour are sponsored by Elanco Products Company, Division of Eli Lilly and Company, Indianapolis, Indiana, in cooperation with the National Young Farmers Association.

This year marks the eleventh year of the program that encourages open dialog between farmers and urban consumers Approximately 88 million consumers have now heard agriculture's story through the efforts of these spokespersons.

According to Linda Fogle, coordinator of the program for Elanco, the program has been very successful in meeting its goal of opening communication lines between farmers and urban consumers.

"We're happy to have the opportunity to help young farmers raise awareness and understanding of ag related issues among urban consumers. There are so many concerns nationally about agriculture today and we feel the best people to address those concerns are the farmers themselves," Fogle concludes.

Research Data Given On Farm Family Stress

Editor's Note: We hear a lot about the stress that's placed on farm families do to an economy that forces farmers out of their preferred occupation. Harold Capener, Department of Rural Sociology, Cornell University, spoke on this subject to the Northeastern Ag Communication Conference in Ithaca last week. Here are some of the facts reported by the professor:

There's a mark difference in the nature of the farm families that are going out of farming today from what we have been accustomed to in the '40s, '50s and '60s.

In 1964 a study here in New York state done by Larry Zeitermoff, Department of Agricultural Economics, on farmers who stop shipping milk to Syracuse. He found that these were for the most part in the 20 to 30 cow range of operations. They were older in age. Eighty-six percent of them were over 50. They had relatively little education. Seventy-one percent of them had less than high school. The number of years that they had been in farming was very long. Sixty-six percent of them had been in over 20 years. Their income from farming was low. Sixty-two percent were making under $2,000 off the farm. Obviously, they were surviving by off farm work. They were doing other things to supplement that kind of a level of income. This was the characterization of these kinds of families that had gone out in 1964. In summary, these were smaller tenant level kind of farms with persons of little education, with limited skills, with low equity, with low income, with little political or economic clout. We came to feel that they did not make that much difference in the farm economy.

Today the current families that are being involved in this depletion represent a group who are rather highly educated, who are very capable and dedicated kind of farmers who have very alert and promising children, who have been social, civic, and religious leaders in their community. They are farmers and families who are young and capable and aggressive managers. People who one of the midwest bankers said, "They are the kind of families that we were betting on. We had given them our money. We were so confident in them. And when they lost it, it wasn't their fault. It was a set of externalities that were largely beyond their control."

What happens then to the agricultural communities in which these kinds of families live? In Lebanon, Kansas, a population of 500, the school closed, the jail closed, the sheriff layed off four of the eight deputies that he had. And these were the deputies that were needed to attend the auctions and the foreclosures. In Lennox, Iowa, a population of 1,380, for sale signs were up for the residents. Young people left town. Health services and social services were cut. Gravel roads went back to dirt roads. In these communities, the impact on the lumber yards, the hardware stores, the drug stores, the service stations, the beauty salons, the banks, the agri business dealers, the automobile dealers, and the vitality of the social and the civic and the religious organizations were all marketably effected.

In the northeast we have approximately two years of lag time that we've been enjoying since this thing hit the midwest. It's called lag time because we haven't yet literally become conscious of the impact that this farm decline is going to have on our economy. There has been a steady decline however in New York state farms. Our highest number of farms as you know was in 1880 when we had 240,000. Today 100 years later, we have 25,000 of what's called commercial farms. That's about an 85 percent decline in 100 years. That's pretty steep if you look at the chart. Of the 25,000 commercial farms that we have today, it's estimated we'll lose a quarter of those farms within the next five years. Many of these farms are the cream of the crop. Dedicated, capable, young family farm units that simply got started because they were born at the wrong time. They got started in the mid '70s and in the '80s, the very worst time to try to buy into a high rolling enterprise with everything high. And on the euphoria that everything is going to be roses because it looks so promising. But then comes 1981-1982 and they find themselves leveraged in positions that were impossible for them.

Of course the needs of farm families in stress are different from off farm needs. An interesting comparison was made by Joan Blongdale who is a mental health consultant in northern Iowa. Joan had worked in Rhode Island for many years and one of the last experiences she had in Rhode Island just before she left was to help close down the General Dynamics Boat Division in which some 3,000 people lost their jobs. And she felt that she was pretty skilled in terms of bringing assistance to families in need.

She said when she got out to northern Iowa and began to deal with the farm families there she understood how little she really knew about the differences between farm families and the families who have their occupations in industry. True, all persons who lose their income have the same kind of worries about where the food is going to come from, how the rent is going to be paid, how they are going to pay the school expenses, and the daily elements of living. But she said from that point on there is not very much similarity. What is different with the farm families is that they do not have employment insurance. They do not have a package of fringe benefits that have often times includes medical benefits and other kinds of insurance. They have not had to mortgage their home in order to obtain their job or to work at the factory. Their children have not necessarily had a career expectation to take over the dad's job.

And she said most important of all, when you lose your job at the factory, it is not your fault. It is somebody elses doings that relieve you of a burden of guilt and responsibility. She said she had no appreciation of that until she began to deal with these families. The sense of image for a farmer is what we know in rural ideaology as status based on what we call ascribed characteristics.

It's who you are that identifies you. It's your occupation that identifies you. And so if you are farmer Bill Smith and you live on the Smith farm that's who you are. And if you do not have the Smith farm any more then who are you? What are you? This kind of identity loss, this ego loss, this self image loss, gives you the feeling of being a failure, the feeling of blame, and the feeling of being a poor manager. The eyes of your neighbors on you. These kind of things are talked about in the rural sector, around the kitchen table in terms of the families in the neighborhood. Kids pick up this kind of conversation on the school bus and it's passed along to the other kids and it then goes on into the family context. The children of the family feel the same kind of loss. A young teenager has the feeling that his whole future has just gone down the drain. And who is he? And what is he? He has spent his life career with an expectation that this is what his future is going to be. And so we see the depths of this kind of devastation on farm families.

Fruit Tree Yields Affected By Many Factors

NEWARK, Del. – Many factors influence the quality and quantity of fruit a tree bears. Home gardeners sometimes wonder why their trees don't produce. Delaware State College extension agent Glenn Layton says the following are some of the possible reasons.

Age — Fruit trees purchased from a nursery are usually one to two years old. Depending on the species and variety, they require an additional two to seven years after planting to mature. Bearing ages for some of the most common fruit trees are: apple (two to five years), peach (two to four years), sweet cherry (four to seven years) and pear (four to six years). Dwarf apple and pear trees usually start to bear one to two years earlier than standard size trees, Layton says.

Health — Good health is essential for quality fruit production. Insects and diseases are the two main problems of fruit trees. Through a regular spray program, these problems can be controlled.

Winter weather — Most hardy fruit trees need a certain amount of cold weather to end their dormancy and promote spring growth. When winters are too mild, Layton says, spring growth is delayed, irregular and slow. These factors extend the period of blooming, and thereby increase the possibility of frost injury.

On the other hand, extreme cold during winter dormancy kills the fruit buds on some trees. Winter weather rarely threatens hardy apple, pear, plum, and sour cherry varieties. Sweet cherry trees, however, are relatively sensitive to cold until they become dormant, while peach trees are very vulnerable to cold weather. Their buds can be killed by midwinter temperatures of minus 10 degrees F.

Frost damage — As fruit buds grow and open in the spring, they become increasingly susceptible to injury from frost. Exposed buds can usually withstand temperatures near 24 degrees F. However, Layton says the open blossoms of practically all fruit trees may be killed if the temperature drops below 27 degrees F.

When a heavy frost is expected, covering trees sometimes prevents bud or blossom injury, provided temperatures do not fall too low and the cold is of short duration. Cheesecloth, old bed sheets or similar protective coverings may be used.

During spring frosts, some commercial growers heat their orchards, but this is impractical for most home gardeners, Layton says. After a hard freeze, injured blossoms may appear normal, but if the pistils (center parts of the blossoms) are killed, the tree will not bear fruit.

Pollination — Without sufficient pollination, a tree may bloom but develop no fruits. Some species have what are called perfect flowers. That is, both the anthers (which contain pollen) and the pistils (which develop into fruit), are located in the same blossom. Trees that bear fruit through self-pollination are called self-fruitful.

However, there are many tree types with perfect flowers that can't produce fruit from their own pollen. These are called self-*un*fruitful and require pollen from another variety.

Self-fruitful trees include sour cherries, most peach varieties and European-type plums. Self-unfruitful trees include most apple, sweet cherry, pear, and Japanese and American plums. To ensure pollination, two or more varieties of these types must be planted. Bees and other insects usually cross-pollinate trees growing close to each other.

Available light — Fruit trees need full sunlight for best production. Inadequate sunlight delays the beginning of fruit bearing and may reduce the amount of fruit. Don't place fruit trees where they are shaded by buildings or other trees.

Competition — Trees grow more vigorously and bear better if they have adequate space to develop their root systems. Don't plant them where the roots of forest or shade trees compete for the same soil. To reduce competition from weds or grass, cultivate, mulch, or apply a weed killer, Layton advises.

Pruning — Pruning during the first three or four years is very important for future fruit production. A pruned tree will be smaller but more productive than a comparable one that is not pruned. Trim to permit sunlight and spray materials to reach the center of the tree.

For further information on pruning and spraying fruit trees, call the county extension office in Newark (451-2506), Dover (736-1448) or Georgetown (856-7303).

Dairymen Top New Market

HARRISBURG – Pennsylvania dairymen have tapped a new market for milk and other dairy products that could put a dent in local surpluses. It's the restaurant breakfast!

The Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Program last month invited people in the Greater Johnstown-Altoona area to cash in "Real" seals from dairy products toward a breakfast at McDonald's. Each "Real" seals was worth 50 cents, with the offer limited to one per customer.

"And did they respond," explained Dairy Board Chairman Don Duncan.

More than 25,000 customers redeemed "Real" seals before the promotion ended April 30, including seals from specially prepared side panels on half gallon containers.

"That's almost double our most optimistic projection," said the Robesonia, Berks County dairyman. "We expect the good will generated by the media campaign to keep sales booming."

Area milk dealers also benefitted. "We had our biggest month ever," reported one dealer, who relates a spurt in sale to customers seeking "Real" seals. Another milk dealer noted that "sales have increased in the last couple of weeks."

McDonald's objective was more than sales. The fast food chain also had a quality message. "We wanted to increase consumer awareness that we use real dairy products," said a company spokesman.

McDonald's accomplished both. One store reported a 23% increase in breakfast business. All the participating stores had brisk business during the final weeks of the breakfast promotion.

"The great advertising and promotion effort by McDonald's made it a bargain for us," said Duncan, speaking for the 4,000 dairymen who support the Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Program.

A sure sign of the promotion's success is the reaction from McDonald's stores in the area. "They want a similar deal," Duncan replied.

No-Till Aids Legume Planting

LEESPORT – If you are looking at your pastures or permanent hayland and wishing you could establish a legume in the old sod without doing any tillage, wish no more says Duane Pysher, district conservationist of the Soil Conservation Service. "If a no-till drill is used on a no-till system, it is possible to do a legume-seeding in a sod field," adds Pysher.

A no-till seeding offers many advantages to the farmer. It is a soil saving system because of the lack of tillage. It is a fuel and labor saving system. You are seeding into an existing firm seedbed and it also requires little or no time for stone removal.

For more information on no-till forage or small grain seedlings, contact the Soil Conservation Service or County Cooperative Extension Service in your area.

Dairy Products Use Biggest In Twenty Years

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Top officials of the National Dairy Promotion and Research Board reported today that dairy product commercial use has increased significantly since the industry's expanded national promotional program began two years ago.

"This is the first time in more than twenty years we have seen a major upturn in dairy products use," said Ivan K. Strickler of Iola, Kansas, Board chairman. He reported at the Board's second annual meeting May 22-23 in Washington, D.C.

Strickler reported that commercial use of total milk has increased seven percent since 1983. He added that cheese use was up 12 percent and butter use increased 5.7 percent.

"Of all the dairy products available to the consumer," Strickler said, "only non-fat dry milk use did not make significant gains."

"We believe the Board's promotional efforts, combined with those of other dairy promotion groups around the country, have made the difference," Strickler said.

The Board's advertising and sales promotion budget for fiscal 1986, the first full year of its promotional program, was $66.4 million with audiences targeted for use of fluid milk, cheese, butter, ice cream and dairy calcium.

A major part of the advertising budget promotes dairy products as a major source of calcium. According to U.S. Dept. of Agriculture figures, about 75 percent of the U.S. population gets its calcium from this source.

Joseph J. Westwater, Board chief executive officer, said the group's research projects also are beginning to produce promising results.

"We have 51 nutrition projects underway studying calcium's role throughout the life cycle," Westwater said. "The researchers are among the best in the country, and we think they soon will have some positive new results about calcium's role in controlling or preventing hypertension, osteoporosis and colon cancer."

Westwater said the Board is proud of its national osteoporosis awareness campaign which in the last year has reached millions of people from coast to coast through a variety of informational materials.

The National Dairy Board has also committed $1.5 million to help create Dairy Reserch Centers at major universities throughout the U.S. These centers would provide a centralized structure for dairy research and training of researchers. Forty-three basic and applied research projects are also underway. They range from studies of the physio-chemical properties of dairy constituents to biotechnology in dairy science.

The Board has also formed an Export and Military Sales Committees to expand dairy product sales in these areas.

Established by Congress through the Dairy and Tobacco Adjustment Act of 1983, the Board began operating in May, 1984. It is financed by a mandatory 15 cents per hundredweight assessment on all milk produced in the contiguous 48 states and marketed commercially by dairy farmers.

Growing Nut Trees

UNIVERSITY PARK — No matter how you look at it, the black walnut is a very valuable tree. Its wood is in such demand that many walnut trees are being harvested before they reach maturity, reports Penn State specialists. This indicates that the supply is diminishing. And it might not be a bad gamble if young people planted some black walnuts. Deep, rich, well-drained soil is needed and they require good management.

Penn State has a correspondence course written for the individual who wants to grow a few nut trees. The course discusses chestnuts, walnuts, hickories, hazels, and filberts. It teaches soil and fertilizer needs and diseases and insect control. Propagation and grafting are discussed with drawings to demonstrate correct ways to graft nut trees. You get the complete course by sending $10, (including postage) to Edible Nuts, Dept. 5000, University Park, PA 16802. Make check payable to Penn State.

Science And Farming In The Future

Editor's Note: Nelvin B. Empet, General Manager, New York DHI Cooperative, gave some timely remarks to the Northeastern Agricultural Communicators last week in Ithaca. Here's an excerpt of those remarks:

I appreciate this opportunity to visit with you about science and farming in the future. I don't believe my crystal ball is any better than yours, but I'll tell you what I see from my perspective in the dairy business. For our purposes today I'll break farm science into 6 areas:

Farm Mechanization; Farm Computing; Farm Management; Genetics; Production Enhances - Bio Tech; and Marketing.

Farm Mechanization:

We've seen: new materials handling, for feeds, fertilizers manure and produce. I expect such equipment to become smarter, and more trouble-free. As we rely more on mechanization, down time can be a real catastrophe. Imagine your computer or word processor down.

I expect we will find more efficient ways to move milk longer distances, maybe even from the farm.

Farm Computing:

This farm science is still in its infancy. Compare the first McCormick Reaper to today's high volume combines and you get some idea of how far farm computing has to go. However, the going will be slow. I see computers performing specific tasks such as feeding, accounting and production records independently. Full integration is very, very complex and will take a generation for implementation. Look how long it took for the bulk tank and pipeline to be adopted and they were simple to use compared to the computer.

DHI's delivery system is changing and will continue to change as we apply computing power to dairy herd management. Currently, the RMS telecommunications access permits farmers or farm consultants to access the herd records. The AIM program allows sorting and formatting of this data to provide management tools. We are now testing our Day One concept that will eliminate turnaround time for management records by equipping the DHI supervisor with a micro computer.

DHI has competition. For that reason I'd ask you to use the DHI record plan prefix when reporting herd averages. For example, DHI-AP record of 19,700# milk, or DHI-OS-AP record of 21,000# milk.

The role of DHI will continue to be one of providing dairy cow production information that will increase the dairy farmers net profit.

Management:

The farmer is becoming a business manager first and a production worker second. The new generation of farmers will manage resources to maximize the business profit. The resources of dollars, people and facilities will be fully utilized. I expect most farm businesses will be family run, so in one sense the family farm will remain. It will be larger, more mechanized, computerized and will likely have hired production workers.

Farm computing will play a major role in the management of the farm as a decision aid. The biggest change for most farmers wil be to make the time for management. A few years ago I heard a comment that I believe sums up the future in farm management. If you don't like to push the pencil, that is do management work, you can go to work for someone who does.

Genetics:

Animal breeding and selection will respond to the market. As emphasis on milk solids increases, more emphasis will be given to that area. Somatrophin may reduce the emphasis on genetic selection for milk production, but there will be other challenges for dairy genetics: production; milk composition; milk quality; health - disease resistance, reproduction; longevity; and disposition.

Production Enhances - Somatrophin and Iso-Plus:

There are many questions to be answered in the cold light of reality. How will they work in the real world. Can farmers manage the increased production ability? Somatrophin is a great bio-tech break through and will help us learn about milk production and will improve production. I doubt if we'll see a 40% improvement. I think 15% is more realistic.

Marketing:

The science/art of marketing must be better applied to farming. We need to do a better job of:

- determining the market - what does the customer want, not what can we produce;
- producing for the markets;
- monitoring customer needs, innovating and responding quickly.

The co-ops should be in an excellent position to perform this task of being market driven, but unfortunately, I don't see it happening. The fiscal conservatism of agriculture is preventing many co-ops from aggressively moving into the market.

I remain cautiously optimistic about the long term viability of dairy farming in the Northeast. We have a couple more rough years ahead of us and then the situation should improve.

Potato Referendum Vote Set For June 2 to 13

HARRISBURG — Pennsylvania potato growers producing 25 or more acres of potatoes for sale will vote June 2-13 on whether to support an assessment plan designed to provide funds for potato research.

State Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Grubb announced the referendum following a public hearing on the proposed program in Harrisburg. Testimony was received from five individual growers and the Pennsylvania Cooperative Potato Growers Association, representing more than 100 potato growers in the state.

"All testified in favor of the program, which calls for an assessment of 2 cents per hundredweight on all potatoes sold by eligible growers. The Department is conducting this new referendum in view of the support shown at the hearing," said Grubb, noting that passage of the program could mean more than $45,000 annually for research.

"There's no question about the need for continued research to make Pennsylvania producers more competitive in the marketplace," he added.

The fund would be administered by a 10-member advisory board comprised of participating growers.

Referendum ballots were mailed to 175 eligible growers on May 22. Returned ballots will be tallied by a teller committee comprised of affected growers. Passage of the program requires a majority of those voting accounting for a majority of acreage production.

Ballots must be received at the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Marketing Development, 2301 N. Cameron Street, Harrisburg, PA 17110-9408 by 4 p.m. Friday, June 13.

The Joys Of Being A Farmer Boy

Last week you saw the third in a series of six articles written by Daniel Luke Fisher about the feelings a farm boy has while he grows up on the Franklin County family farm. Daniel is a 13-year-old Amish boy with seven brothers who live on a 160 acre farm along the Blue Mountain.

Here's his fourth article:

We live right near the Blue Mountain.

Our farm adjoins the mountain so we own a couple of acres of trees. We call those acres the woods. That woods has seen a lot of us boys already. There's so many things to do such as taking a walk, camping, playing indians, hunting, riding ponys, and much more.

These days the project we have going up in the woods is building a raft.

We chopped the logs down with an axe and a hatchet, Back breaking work!

Whenever I was getting tired and in need of a good laugh, all I did was let Samuel swing the axe for a while, I sure got my laugh! He would get the axe back, swing with all his might and miss the cut by 5 inches.

I laughed 'till my stomach ached!

Our raft is 9 ft. by 7 ft. square. It's built of logs about 3 inches in diameter so I expect it to hold us.

Samuel and I sure had a surprise one day. We had chopped down some logs near the creek. We put one log in the water to see how well it floats and, IT DIDN'T FLOAT! "Boy, Oh, Boy!" I thought all our hard work had went down the drain, (Or down the creek for that matter.)

But then I thought about it that they're probably too full of Sap to float. Boy! What a relief! Once they dry out I guess they will float. I sure hope so anyway.

We also have a lean-to that we built last summer. It slopes on 2 sides.

We tied a log to 2 trees, then layed a lot of other logs on it. Then we covered that up with leaves. After that we put sticks on the leaves to hold them in place.

One time we ate dinner up in the woods.

When it came around to opening the soup can we discovered that we hadn't brought a can opener. We had to pound it open with a rock.

We also took some popcorn along just for fun. We put that on a screen and put it over the fire. It started popping and suddenly it all went up in flames.

Leaders Praise Proposal

HARRISBURG — Dairy leaders testified in favor of the proposed regulatory changes concerning the labeling of artificial dairy products, tightening of milk standards and easing introduction of new dairy products. The proposed rules will also establish identity standards for cheese and related cheese products.

At Wednesday's hearing, Carl Brown, of PFA, expressed support for the Bureau of Foods and Chemistry's proposed changes and noted this change will bring Pennsylvania standards in line with other states.

However, he added, "We have two concerns relating to the proposed rules." Brown suggested the article 57.1a be amended to read, "Milk (shall) in final package form for beverage use may contain not less than 3.4 percent milkfat but not more than 6.0 percent milkfat and not less than 8.6 percent milk solids not fat."

Recommending that the total solid level then be set at 12 percent, Brown added that this level could be regulated by altering the milkfat content if necessary. A 12 percent total solids level, he noted, is a "reasonable and achievable" level.

New York's levels are currently at 3.4 percent milkfat and 11.7 total solids, Brown noted.

Sidney Barnard, Penn State Food Science, stated that he is strongly in favor of the proposed rules "mandated by changes in federal standards."

Listing artificial dairy products on menus and labels, Barnard said, will allow "consumers to know what they are eating...at home and away from home."

"We believe the proposed rules...will help insure the continued health of the state's dairy industry, in addition to furthering the interests of commonwealth consumers and citizens generally," stated James Fraher of Inter-State Milk Producers Cooperative.

Specifically we support artificial identifying as a way to promote honest and fair dealings, he continued.

These changes are necessary to bring Pennsylvania producers in line with other producers nationwide, Fraher noted.

"Our main concern is that consumers are not mislead when purchasing these (imitation) products," said Brenda Shambaugh of the Pennsylvania State Grange.

The proposed rules listed in the Pennsylvania Bulletin, Volume 16, Number 17, of April 26, 1986, clearly define milk and dairy products and their standards. The rules also clearly define cheese standards and allow a temporary marketing permit to be issued for new dairy products.

Anticipated implementation of these rules is expected in five to six weeks.

USDA Buyout Report

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The second weekly report on the buyout was released by the USDA on Wednesday.

USDA figures show an estimated 36,900 head of cattle in the program were slaughtered during the week ending May 10. This figure includes all cows, heifers and calves in the DTP, according to the USDA spokesman.

An estimated cumulative total of 332,900 head have been slaughtered since the beginning of the DTP on April 1.

Meat purchases by the government reached 10.3 million pounds for the week ending May 24. This meat was purchased in the form of 5.6 million pounds of canned beef, 4,581,500 pounds of bulk-frozen ground beef, 36,000 pounds of frozen smoked hams, and 38,000 pounds of frozen choice beef for a domestic purchase cumulative total of 79.2 million pounds.

Dairy cows that were reported for export totaled 3,348 head. This total is expected to increase as foreign countries are preparing to take advantage of the Export Enhancement program.

The spokesman noted that these figures indicate the program is on track for May.

Two Tours To Highlight Penn State Crops Day

UNIVERSITY PARK — The Pennsylvania State University's annual Crops Day will be held June 26 at the agronomy research farm at Rock Springs Agricultural Research Center. The program features two agronomy tours as well as exhibits and publications describing related research.

Researchers conducting the small grains tour will describe new developments in small grain varieties, variety evaluations for spring and winter grains, weed control, disease control, and management practices for grain production. Visitors can find out about the most recent developments in seeding rate, row spacing, nitrogen management and lodging control.

The second tour will focus on forages, including the status of red clover varieties, antiquality aspects of brassicas, quality evaluation of warm season grasses, and management of small grains for silage production.

The program will run from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the research farm, 9 miles southwest of State College on Route 45. Participants may purchase lunch at the Crops Day headquarters on the farm.

For more information, contact your county extension office or Dr. Elwood Hatley, professor of agronomy, at 106 Ag Administration Building, University Park, (814)865-2543.

Carroll County Team Tops Md. Dairy Bowl Competition

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — This year's eleventh annual Maryland 4-H dairy bowl contest, held at the University of Maryland in College Park, featured a new set of rules and procedures. But results of the senior youth division bore striking resemblance to those of seven years ago.

In 1979 a Carroll County team won the senior 4-H competition following three years of domination by adjacent Frederick County. This year, Carroll County again succeeded its western neighbor as the state senior 4-H dairy bowl champion.

The victory marks only the second time that Carroll County has won the right to represent Maryland in regional and national 4-H dairy bowl competition. And members of two families played key roles both years.

Nancy R. Powel, 17, of Uniontown is captain of the Carroll County team which defeated its opponents in all three rounds of this year's contest. Her sister, Anne, then 16, was captain of the county's senior 4-H dairy bowl state champion team in 1979.

Kathy Weant, 16, of Longville also is a member of this year's Carroll County senior 4-H dairy bowl team. Her cousin, Todd Weant, then 15, served with Anne Powel on the county's first state champion senior 4-H dairy bowl team seven years ago.

Other members of this year's Carroll County senior 4-H dairy bowl team are Shane Schwartzbeck, 16, of Union Bridge, and Tonna M. Caple, 18, of Warfieldsburg. Gary Dell, 17, of Cranberry is the alternate team member.

Coaching this year's Carroll County 4-H dairy bowl teams are Roger and Loretta Wright of Bloom. The 1979 coach was Mrs. Karen Hobson of Taneytown.

Frederick County salvaged a decisive victory in this year's statewide junior 4-H dairy bowl competition, showing that it still has power potential for senior contests in future years.

Members of the champion junior 4-H dairy bowl team are Andi Raber, 13, of Woodsboro; Sonny Williams, 14, of Johnsville; Lacy Flook, 14, of Middletown, and Stacey Guyton, 14, of Brukittsville. Team coach was Joseph W. Raber of Woodsboro.

Montgomery County won runnerup honors in the state junior 4-H dairy bowl knowledge competition. Howard County placed second in the senior contest.

This year's state champion senior 4-H dairy bowl team from Carroll County is now eligible to represent Maryland in national competition, set for November 8, during the North American International Livestock Exposition at Louisville, Ky.

By that time, the team captain Nancy Powel, will have traveled to Scotland as a member of Maryland's 1985 national championship 4-H dairy cattle judging team. The Maryland team is scheduled to represent the United States in international youth competition at the Royal Highland livestock show on June 18 near Edinburgh.

Nancy won both the Sire Power and John L. Morris trophies last year at the Maryland State Fair by placing first overall and in breed judging during the state senior 4-H cattle judging contest.

Her father, William R. Powel III, was the state champion 4-H dairy cattle judge in 1954. Nancy's brother, Tom, and his twin sister, Anne, placed first and third, respectively, in senior 4-H dairy cattle judging at the 1979 state fair.

Tom Powel is now a graduate student in dairy science at North Carolina State University. Anne is a graduate student at Cornell, studying reproductive physiology of dairy cattle.

In partnership with H. Eugene Bendig of Uniontown, the Powel family farm operation is known as Unicorn Associates, raising purebred Guernsey and Holstein dairy cattle.

Twin Valley FFA'ers Poultry Judging

Four members of the Twin Valley FFA Chapter recently participated in the Eastern Pennsylvania FFA Poultry Judging contest sponsored by Weavers Poultry of New Holland.

Students who participated in this contest, hosted by the Grassland FFA Chapter at New Holland, were required to complete 14 different skill areas.

Following the competition Troy Gieringer was awarded a third place finish among the 18 Berks County contestants, with Butch Harrison finishing tenth. Other Twin Valley contestants were Jeff Ortlip and Bob Bell.

Workshops Apply Classroom Work

By Jesse Howe
Student Farm Manager

"Workshops let us apply classroom work to practical experience", says Kelly Meckley, pre-vet student at Penn State. Kelly recently attended an artificial insemination (A.I.) workshop at The Circleville Farm, which is Penn State's student demonstration farm.

"Our schedules are filled with studying, paper writing and attending classes, so we don't have much time to get practical farm experience. Workshops really help", says Dave Myers, an ag science major and student farm manager at Circleville Farm

A day-long artificial insemination workshop was recently sponsored at the Circleville Farm. Combined with video training materials and classroom discussion, students worked patiently in the classroom learning how to pass a breeding straw through preserved reproductive tracts. Standard procedure to introduce trainees to A.I.

Once the procedure was mastered, Dennis Burns, a local dairy farmer from Centre county invited the class to this farm to practice the A.I. competencies on live cattle.

Dennis and his wife milk about 90 registered Holsteins. Both are A.I. certified and have held similar training schools at their farm.

Applying what they learned in the classroom, each of the seven students successfully performed the technique of artificially inseminating a dairy cow.

"Today, so many dairy and beef producers are caught up in the business end of farming that they're finding it difficult to find the time to breed cows themselves," says Myers. "Often it's left up to the herdsperson to do the breeding".

Many ag graduates become herdsperson and need to know A.I. techniques. "Students can become more marketable by having the practical experience in A.I., remarks Mary McGowan, ag education major and student farm manager of Circleville Farm.

The Circleville Farm is a student demonstration farm sponsored in part by the College of Agriculture, The Pennsylvania Legislature and The W.K. Kellogg Foundation.

As on-farm jobs become more competitive, graduates with the most diversified practical farm experience are more apt to get interesting job offers. Being competent with the artificial insemination technique causes one to be higher in demand.

Brazil To Buy 200 Million Pounds of Beef

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Agriculture Richard E. Lyng today announced that the U.S. Department of Agriculture has signed a contract to sell Brazil 90,000 metric tons (198,414,000 pounds) of beef.

This sale is part of the 200 million pounds mandated for export by the Food Security Act of 1985 to minimize the adverse effects of the Dairy Termination Program on U.S. livestock producers. These exports are in addition to historical U.S. beef export levels.

Brazil will purchase 63,000 metric tons of steer and heifer beef and 27,000 metric tons of cow beef. Delivery, which is free-on-board vessel, will be from July through October 1986. The product was sold at $655 per metric ton, or about 30 cents per pound, according to a recent report in the Drovers Journal.

The beef will be purchased according to U.S. specifications. USDA's Agricultural Marketing Service will procure the beef on behalf of the Commodity Credit Corporation through regular procurement invitations. Packers wishing to participate in this program must meet Brazilian import requirements and should contact USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service for detailed information on these requirements. For other information on the sale, call (202) 447-3224.

OPINION

eliminating it.

Most authorities suggest you consume at least one-fourth of your daily calories and nutrients at breakfast. Hunger can leave you less able to cope with stress. Eat an adequate and nutritious breakfast each day. It just makes good sense to eat moderately and regularly, especially when you're under stress.

Some kind of physical exercise program will improve your ability to manage stress. Stretching and flexing the muscles of the neck, arms, shoulders, thighs, and midsection reduce the chance that these muscles will tighten up and produce common indicators of stress–headache, neckache, and backache.

A more advanced exercise program not only helps manage stress but improves cardiovascular fitness. Over a period of time, cardiovascular exercise can benefit the heart, lungs, and arteries and result in biochemical changes that elevate your mood and encourage a healthy self-concept. You can do more work or do your regular work with less fatigue.

In addition to support groups, diet, and exercise, managing stress also means balancing your personal, social, and work-related activities.

Develop a variety of interests, activities, and relationships.

Balance work with recreation.

Talk about problems to someone who cares. Don't keep anxiety and anger bottled up.

Set reasonable personal expectations and goals.

Learn to accept what cannot be changed.

Learn to say no to requests you cannot reasonably handle.

Give in once in a while, even if you think you are right.

One of the most unbelievable findings reported by Professor Capener was that in both the study of Western farm families and the study in New York State, researchers found that the church was the least responsive to the emotional needs of farm families under stress.

Our Farm Forum where readers write to the editor for publication is open for you to share your experiences with farm stress or your ideas on how to solve it.

Bee Specialist to Address Tri-County Beekeepers Meeting

DOYLESTOWN – Dr. Robert Berthold, beekeeping specialist on the faculty at Delaware Valley College, Doylestown, will be the featured speaker at the Annual Tri-County Meeting of the Lebanon, Schuykill and Dauphin County Beekeepers' associations. The meeting will be held Tuesday, June 24 at the Keeney-Zeigler Apiaries in Bethel, beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Berthold's presentation will include a slide show on "The Madison Avenue Approach to Selling Honey." Although honey is an excellent product that can be put to many uses in the home, the per capita use of honey in the United States has been declining over the past 10 years.

In addition to the honey it produces, the honey bee is also of critical importance in the pollination of many agricultural crops. The latest estimate is that the honey bee is responsible each year for pollinating crops in this country valued at over 20 billion dollars.

The annual meeting will also mark the open house to celebrate the newly-completed Keeney-Zeigler Honey House.

The meeting is open to the public and there is no charge for admission. It will be held rain or shine. The apiary is located on old Route 22, one mile east of Route 501.

USDA Monitoring Meat Imports for Radiation

WASHINGTON – In the wake of the Soviet nuclear accident at Chernobyl, the U.S. Department of Agriculture will monitor meat and poultry imports from affected countries for radiation at U.S. ports of entry, said Donald L. Houston, administrator of USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service.

In addition, USDA has notified nations that export meat and poultry products to the United States that they must institute controls to prevent radiation contamination in products destined for the United States if high ground levels of radiation are detected in their country.

At the present time there appears to be no danger to meat and poultry imports from radiation contamination from the Chernobyl accident," said Houston.

"We are, however, taking the precautionary measure of requiring countries exporting meat and poultry to the United States to test ground contamination levels. If those levels exceed 0.13 microcuries (a measure of radiation) per square meter, we will require the countries to institute a control program to assure that the amount of radiation in the meat is below U.S. protective action levels," Houston explained.

As a check to assure compliance, USDA will monitor incoming shipments at points of entry. If the monitoring indicates any radiation contamination, the product will be held while additional tests are performed in a laboratory to confirm the radiation level.

CCC Loan Interest Rate Lowered

WASHINGTON – Commodity loans disbursed in May by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Commodity Credit Corporation will carry a 6-½ percent interest rate, according to Acting CCC Executive Vice President Milton Hertz.

The new rate, down from 7-¼ percent, reflects the interest rate charged CCC by the U.S. Treasury in May.

The CCC interest rate has not been below 7 percent since 1977, Hertz said.

National Holstein Convention In Milwaukee

In a state known as America's Dairyland, famous for leading the nation in the number of dairy cows, production of milk and dairy products, it seems fitting that the 101th national Holstein convention should be held in Milwaukee from June 29 to July 2.

Speaking on behalf of 8,000 members of the Wisconsin Holstein Association, Convention Chairman Elroy Borgwardt extended an invitation for Holstein families to plan to spend part of their summer at convention in the Badger State.

"I ask you to join us as we step into a new century of dairying, armed with the knowledge from the experience of the past hundred years," Borgwardt said.

"There'll be plenty to see and do with opportunities to see the many sights of the area — Hoard's Farm and Museum, Dairy Shrine Museum, Milwaukee Zoo — along with recreational activities.

"We want to show you our Wisconsin hospitality — and the welcome mat will be out!" Borgwardt said.

Activities will be divided between the Hyatt Regency, the State Fair Park and the Mecca Convention Center. Juniors headquarters will be at the Marc Plaza Hotel.

Convention hotel applications and complete housing information will appear next month in the Holstein World magazine. Registration and ticket order forms will also be published in the World.

What Will You Do Now?

COLLEGE PARK, Md. – The decision to participate–or not to participate--in USDA's dairy buyout program may have been a little difficult for farmers across the nation.

Most dairy farmers have substantial assets tied up in land, machinery, livestock, supplies and storage for crops – all geared toward the raising and management of dairy cattle.

But there are ways to effectively use all of those items and still participate in the USDA program, says Dr. John W. Wysong, agricultural economics specialist for the University of Maryland's Cooperative Extension Service.

One option is to turn to raising beef cattle, Wysong says. Many of the buildings on a dairy farm can be converted easily for beef cattle production.

"At the same time, a farmer can shift the farm's cropping system toward more cash crops for sale off the farm," he says.

He adds: "The beef cattle industry has established market channels to benefit the farmer. And the farmer still can use the technical knowledge and experience accumulated as a dairy producer."

Another option for farmers getting out of the dairy business is raising sheep and riding horses, according to Wysong.

Operating boarding and breeding facilities can be profitable, Wysong says.

Start-up costs for sheep production can be as low as $3,000 for raising lambs and selling wool, he says.

"The market for lamb meat has been strong for the last two years," he adds.

How profitable is beef, sheep, or horse production?

"Generally, the return per acre is not as high as for dairy production," says Wysong.

"But the return on each hour of the farmer's labor will be higher."

And which of the three alternatives is most profitable?

Sheep will return more per dollar invested, according to Wysong.

DEALER INQUIRIES INVITED

U.S. Milk Production Climbs in April

HARRISBURG — April production figures showed a net decrease in cow numbers from a year ago, but total production increased over 39 million pounds from the same period.

USDA figures show that in Pennsylvania in April 1985 there were approximately 738,000 cows in the state compared to 730,000 cows this year. This decrease is an early sign of the effectiveness the of the Milk Termination Program, according to Jack Kirkland, dairy marketing specialist at Penn State.

The production increase from 793 million pounds in April 1985 to 832 million pounds in April 1986 is the result of increases in individual production records. Production per cow rose from 1,075 pounds per cow to 1,140 pounds.

However, the total production is down from the March figure of 840 million pounds. This decrease is more evidence of the effectiveness of the MTP.

Total milk production in the 21 major dairy states, which produce 84.5 percent of the total production, was 12.7 billion pounds of milk. Trends found in Pennsylvania, production per cow up and total production up, were similar throughout the United States.

Despite the seemingly bleak outlook at this point, Kirkland pointed out that it is necessary to look at the whole picture to keep things in perspective. "The bright side is that costs are also dropping," Kirkland said.

The three main grouping for costs are feed, interest rates, and fuel, which includes fertilizer costs. Costs continue to drop faster than the milk price, Kirkland stated. With this in mind, he ventured that 1986 could turn out to be a better year than 1985.

Replacement cow costs are also lower this year, averaging $865 compared to $950 to last year. He noted that this is not good for those selling, yet it is the trend for all dairy industry prices to be decreasing.

Prices for fluid milk, at the farmer level prior to any assessments, were also down from one year ago. "This is reflective of more milk, more total volume produced. The depressed farmer prices show a smaller percentage of milk that receives the higher price for fluid milk," Kirkland noted.

Last year, in Federal Order 2, farmers were receiving a blend price of $12.19 per hundredweight compared to $11.31 this year. With the deduction of the 67 cent assessment, the actual price that the farmer receives is $10.64.

Federal Order 4 price per hundredweight this month is $12.23 prior to the reduction of 67 cents for the assessment. In April 1985 this price was $13.11.

The western quarter of the state and the eastern part of Ohio, Federal Order 36, received $11.88 in April this year and $12.90 last year.

Presently in the northeastern states, which include Pennsylvania and all states to the north, the measure of profitability or milk price—feed ratio is 1.46. The breakeven point is 1.3 Kirkland stated. With the assessment of 67 cents figured into the ratio, the level is still above the 1.3 level, Kirkland noted, citing this as further evidence that the dairy industry is still relatively profitable.

Many farmers are putting more cows on to make more milk. This will ultimately result in a lower net price for the milk, Kirkland explained, and further reduction in the support price.

"The distribution of profitability is all over, it boils down to the management," Kirkland stated. The exact number of farmers who will survive and who won't remains to be seen, but the poorer managers probably will not be in dairy too long, Kirkland explained.

The Dairy Business

By Newton Bair

Competitive Nutrition

There are all kinds of angles that might be explored in milk marketing. personally, I think mostly about what tastes good when I think about nutritive values of what I eat. But with all the hubbub about vitamins, calcium, and especially about fat these days, I wonder about the negative publicity we get.

The publicity that is generated by so-called "research nutritioinists", who always seems to emphasize the negative.

Why do we always get the impression that milk is too high in fat, for instance? I think that FAT gets entirely too much play in the press. Isn't whole milk actually only about 3.7% fat.

I'm not alone in assuming that that means it is actually 96.3% fat free! How many other good and nutritious foods can make that claim?

Sure, whole milk does contain some of that stuff called cholesterol. The stuff that clogs the arteries and blows the blood pressure. Doesn't nearly all the good stuff we eat, like beef, pork, and eggs contain both fat and cholesterol? Don't kid yourself, some vegetables also contain the same thing.

Now mother nature doesn't like to be kidded, so she must be taken seriously sometimes. Eating would be pretty bland, and life would be quite dull if we had to live on spinach and water. If Mama Nature Puts a little extra zoom in the best foods, there must be a reason.

Why is it that people live longer and are more productive in the countries that eat the most meat and drink the most milk?

Many Third World people subsist on manioc and milo, strictly vegetable and no fat or cholesterol. Their average life expectancy is less than forty years, and they are not leaders of mankind these days.

We ought not miss the boat on calcium either. No one denies that milk is one of the best sources of calcium for the body.

But some enterprising sales promoters are marketing lime pills, to be taken twice a day so you don't get osteoporosis! Might as well go lick the foundation of the house, or chew on a bit of limestone for breakfast! Not very tasty, but a lot cheaper than buying pills. But then, that wouldn't do much for the pill industry, would it?

Hey, maybe it would be profitable to set up a roadside stand and sell "limestone pellets" for strong bones. Easier and cheaper than milking cows, and purely "natural". I'm not sure what chewing them would do for the teeth though. They would probably be like the cows that graze on short grass in stony soil - strong teeth but worn below the gums!

But wouldn't the profit be tremendous? Lets see, at just thirty nine cents for an eight ounce bottle that would come to seventy six cents a pound, or $1520.00 a ton for limestone.

Don't let anyone else in on your secret. The competition is already pretty heavy.

It is just that ridiculous kind of competition that the Dairy Business must constantly fight. Certainly, we don't want to be a party to that kind of phony business. But in order to combat it and compete for survival, we need to continue the type of advertising that is just started to grace the TV screen. Not only the "Health Kick" angle, but also the goodness of Dairy products.

For years we depended on people to buy our products because they were cheap and good. It is time that we tell the truth about both good health and good taste. We don't need to sell pills to do that. All we need to do is shout a little louder than the pill pushers about good taste. Most people would rather eat Ice Cream or Cheese, than eat calcium pills that have no cholesterol.

But they need to be reminded of it, or they might go back to eating calcium pills and sawdust. I wonder how long it will be until someone tries to market a pill containing Cholesterol? Or maybe even Fat pills?

Don't be surprised if someone tries to manufacture and sell genuine, pure and natural "Cow Pills". We already have the jump on them, if we do not keep the secret under our hat.

June is Dairy month, a good time to bolster our attitudes about innovative promotion. We have a real edge, so let's use it, not lose it.

Pittsburgh Set For Dairy Festival

HARRISBURG – It'll be party time for the noon hour crowd in downtown Pittsburgh June 3 when the Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Board officially kicks off June Dairy Month for the state's 14,000 dairymen with country music, cows, calves and free ice cream.

The country celebration, complete with a square dancing demonstration, will be held from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. in Market Square, according to Elder Vogel, Rochester, a member of the state dairy advisory board who is helping to coordinate the event.

Vogel said that Pennsylvania Dairy Princess Beth Heald, State College, will preside over the mid-day festivities along with Washington-Greene County Princess Laurie Duran of Bulger.

A butter-making demonstration conducted by local dairy princesses, is also part of the festivities.

"We want to remind our city friends that milk and other dairy products are fun and great tasting," the Rochester dairyman explained. In 1985, the June Dairy Month kickoff was staged in Philadelphia.

The ice cream will be provided by western Pennsylvania milk dealers.

"And they promise plenty of free milk and other dairy products to go along with the scoops of ice cream," Vogel said.

Agriculture is the number one industry in Pennsylvania, and dairying is the leading agricultural enterprise. The Pennsylvania Agricultural Statistic Service estimates Keystone State dairymen received $1.3 billion for milk produced in 1984.

Pennsylvania ranks fifth nationally in total milk production, and second in the manufacture of ice cream and Italian cheese.

"Not a penny of tax money is being spent on our kickoff party," Vogel said. "The full tab is being picked up by the western Pennsylvania milk dealers and the 4,000 dairymen who contribute to the Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Program," he noted.

An average person eats 1,426 pounds of food per year, 3 ounces a day more than 20 years ago.

More Wheat Exports To Turkey

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Agriculture Richard E. Lyng recently announced an additional opportunity for U.S. wheat sales to Turkey under the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Export Enhancement Program. As with previous announcements under this program, sales of wheat will be made to buyers in Turkey at competivie world prices.

Lyng said this program will give U.S. exporters the opportunity to sell an additional 500,000 metric tons of wheat. The export sales will be subsidized with wheat from the inventory of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The subsidy will enable U.S. exporters to compete at commercial prices in the Turkish market in response to future tenders for wheat.

Dauphin Co. Reports Success with No-Till Soybeans

HARRISBURG — Planting crops with no-till grain drills is becoming increasingly popular in Dauphin County. No-till plantings of small grains and alfalfa have been extremely successful, according to Joel Myers of the Soil Conservation Service in Dauphin County.

Myers explained that advice and assistance is being provided by SCS to individuals desiring to plant no-till crops. Currently no-till drills are being coordinated for soybean planting throughout Dauphin County.

Myers indicated that his experience with soybeans has been very successful when planting in residue. Especially under current dry conditions no-till offers three advantages: 1. It will conserve all available moisture. 2. Crusting usually associated with conventional tillage under dry conditions can be eliminated. 3. A reduction in labor and time required for planting can be significant.

At the present time, in spite of dry, hard soil conditions, no-till drills have been able to penetrate the soil and get to adequate planting depth, Myers stated. In fact, in many cases with good residue cover, bean seed has been planted to a depth where some moisture was available.

Anyone interested in no-till planting in the Dauphin County area should contact Joel Myers of the Soil Conservation Service by calling (717) 652-7035.

construction of some kind of new sewage system.

Now you have every right to say what does this have to do with farming. If those municipalities, as they were installing the new septic systems were planning that septic system to use land application of the sewage using land as the living filter, you'd have a number of positive, beneficial effects. If you spray irrigated that secondary treated water out on farm land and/or woodland using that as your living filter, you'd accomplish several things. First of all the municipality would not have to use chemicals to destroy all the nutrients on a daily basis. Secondly, you would be preserving the farm land or agricultural land. Here's how. The municipality would have to have a contract with the farmer or the woodland owner to spray that nutrient rich water on his land. The farmer would be compensated for that contract for keeping the land in agriculture and not developing it by the payment in water and the nutrients that are in that water.

Right now we are planting corn. And what farmer wouldn' be excited if he knew when he went out there and planted his corn that he was going to have a predictable amount of water to make that crop. And in Pennsylvania most of our limitations are because of water. You'd be able to plant and have a much better situation.

The last most important aspect of this procedure is that we will be keeping our water at home. Frankly, I think it is unconscionable that every time you open a spigot in an area that is sewered a few days later the water finds it way into the Delaware Bay or the Chesapeake Bay or the Ohio River. I think that water is a resource that we can no longer afford to export from our area. Yes, if you use land application it will require new management skills to operate. The construction engineer will not be able to take a plan off the shelf, white out some municipality's name and put in another municipality and give it to you. Yes, it will require that engineer to have a knowledge of soils and crops since that will regulate the amount of water and nutrients that can be applied. But I believe the results will make it worth while.

EPA has done many studies on land application of sewage, but in the studies that they have done, the municipality has physically owned the land. Consequently, in order to keep capital expenditures down, they used the least amount of land to apply the most amount of water. That means that they will be trying to apply four, five even six inches of water a week. Most soil types just simply can't handle six inches of water each week.

Now if you reversed yourself 180 degrees and you sav the municipality doesn't have to own the land, but can contract with the farmer to use his land for applying the waste water you have a new tool for keeping farmers in business. And you can have more land covered with less water so the program can have the greatest benefit. Right in this area the Borough of Oxford I believe you will find is doing is this type of application and they are doing it very productively. But if we are concerned about water, if we are concerned about preservation of agriculture land, it seems to me that this is an opportunity to put things into place.

St. Louis To Host National Corn Growers Convention

Roadside Fruit Stand Becomes Thriving Family Farm Business

BY JOYCE BUPP
York County Correspondent

LOGANVILLE — Brown's Orchard retail market has come a long way.

What began as a tiny stand offering fresh fruit by the roadside has grown to a thriving family farm business, and a new, greatly-expanded market. In the rustic atmosphere of wood tones and fruit bins, customers browse through mouth-watering selections, from a bag of crisp spinach to home-baked apple dumplings to fresh fruit packages.

Final touches are going on the new market just in time for strawberry season, the first major fruit crop that heralds the beginning of the fresh produce harvest. Brown's first strawberry plantings went in the ground 25 years ago. But, the berry plantings, popular as a U-pick crop with local strawberry lovers, are just a small part of this market-oriented family business.

Since 1948, four generations of the Earl Brown family have called this beautiful, rolling, orchard land along the Old Susquehanna Trail home. That year, Brown, his wife, Margaret, and their three sons moved here from their former home in York city. A foreman for the York Safe and Lock Company, Brown purchased the 38-acre orchard from relatives after the company closed its doors.

At their York home on Pine Street, the Brown'shad already established a reputation for the chickens and turkeys they raised and retailed. For several years, poultry continued as a major sales item for the small retail stand.

Even before the family had relocated to their Loganville farm, eldest son Stanley, began working in the orchard over that summer.

"I guess that's somewhat why he's always felt such a part of the fruit-growing business," reflects Stan's wife, Nona.

Original orchard acreage has expanded twice over the years, first in 1959, when Stan returned to the business after service in the armed forces. The purchase of a second farm in 1972 nearly doubled the acres under cultivation, now totaling 180 acres of tree fruits, berries, and truck crops.

Strawberries headline the home-grown seasonal array of fresh fruits and vegetables, usually beginning — weather permitting — this last week of May. Customers may either purchase these ready-picked at the retailing stand, or travel the short distance to the extremely clean and carefully-mulched plantings.

Often, the rows ring with children's laughter and neighborhood news, as families make an outing of the berry harvest. Old friends become reacquainted as they fill their boxes and buckets. Berries are sold U-pick by the pound, and thousands of pounds annually leave the Brown's contoured plantings to become shortcake, jams and pies.

Fortunately for customers, no one counts how many are eaten on the spot.

Strawberries open the fresh fruit season at the Brown's retail market. Four-year-old Amanda, the fourth generation of Browns on the Loganville farm, prepares to sample a fat, juicy berry.

Cherries — tart and sweet — are beginning to ripen as the strawberries fade. Recent plantings of blueberry bushes add another new choice for customers.

Peaches come into their golden glory in early July, with some 25 varieties stretching the season through September. Nectarines, plums and pears, along with sweet corn, squash, tomatoes and cantaloupes all add to the Brown's cornucopia of home-grown items. Pumpkins, curly-necked and round "face" types, fill the market area with the feeling and colors of fall and draw youngsters eager to select the perfect jack-o-lantern material.

But it is the apple crop — at least 15 varieties — that provides the mainstay of the Brown's retail business. The first summer varieties come off the trees in July, and picking continues as varieties ripen on into October. With the technology of carefully controlled cold storage, fresh apples are available through late spring, making them virtually a year-round sales item.

That favorite apple by-product, cider, pressed from a selected blend of their own home-grown varieties, is also a leading item for the Browns.

Because of the scarcity of fresh items through the winter and late spring to hold customer interest, Stan and Nona over the years have incorporated a number of innovative marketing touches. The success of their merchandising, plus the need for increased display and parking areas, and more efficient storage, handling and packaging facilities, have come together in the new retail facility.

Eight years ago, aiming to move more fresh fruit during the winter holidays, the Browns began offering customers a selection of fresh fruit baskets.

"We started with just a small number," remembers Nona. "And each year it's grown; this year we had fruit basket items spread all over the partly-finished interior of the new market."

An entire corner of the new retailing area is devoted to the fruit basket line. Selections range from a classic dinner-roll basket filled with choice fruits to ideas as creative as a giant toy truck with a load of apples, citrus, jellies, cheeses or wine.

Fruit boxes — primarily apples — are also available, and many are shipped each year to lucky Florida recipients. Occasionally a box of hand-picked, shiny apples is even packed off to some distant corner of the world.

Another fast-growing Brown retailing angle has developed into the "Orchard Bake Shop."

Stan and Nona Brown, with granddaughter Amanda, are gearing up for the grand opening of their new Brown's Orchard and Farm Market.

Homestead Notes

This fruit-based baking business had its roots in a fund-raising venture started by the Brown's daughter, Linda. While in high school, Linda earned extra cash during the summers by baking items related to the retail produce, such as shortcakes and zucchini bread. Enthusiastic customer response told the Browns that this was a market waiting to be served.

So when plans for the new retailing facility began to take form, Nona Brown's kitchen took on a bakery look as employees began daily turning out such goodies as apple dumplings.

Customers arriving at the Brown's market are now greeted with the heavenly aromas of fresh-baked apple dumplings, breads and cookies, with plans for a doughnut corner to open at a later date. And the Brown's kitchen is quiet once again, with the baking team moved into a commercial bakery area just off the retail sales room.

Green plants are another line added in recent years, to round out gaps created by scarce spring fresh produce items. Blooming potted plants, market packs, and hanging baskets all add customer interest, variety and color to the market. In still another section of the market, an array of jams, jellies, preserves and relishes forms a mouth-watering display.

Focal point of the jellies display is an heirloom Hoosier cabinet that once belonged to Stan's grandmother. It was rescued from nuts and bolts storage use in the family garage, refinished, and given a place of honor in the new market.

Use of the heirloom cabinet typifies the homey theme of the brown — no pun intended — interior and exterior of the retail building. Hanging banners of a Designing fruit baskets is just one of Bill Ream's responsibilities as general market assistant.

Brown's Market Offers Variety of Goods

beige homespun-like fabric, accented with burgundy trim, help define the distinct areas of the sales room. Small decorative touches, such as dried apple face dolls, old-time cooking implements and tools, and barrel halves for display, complete the cozy, rustic atmosphere.

Even the logo of the Brown's Orchard business seems to fit their friendly, homey approach to retailing. Created more than ten years ago by friend and neighbor Paul Helgessen, the stylized design features a partridge in — no, not a pear — an apple tree. Lombardian letter print completes the casual, preferred "imperfect" look.

Scott, the Brown's eldest son, has followed his dad's footsteps in his love of the outdoors and for the fruit growing business. His specialty is in managing the mechanization of the orchard and row crops, since joining the Brown family business after graduation in 1976.

The Browns are quick to emphasize and praise the team spirit of family and capable, loyal employees. Barry Diehl, an employee of many years, is the field foreman. Charlotte Dell is known to many customers as the familiar face at the retail sales counter, and assists with grading. Bill Ream designs the fruit baskets and assists with general market responsibilities. Kathryn Miller is baker and bakery manager, assisted by Sharon Leader, and "fancy" baker Linda Morris who prepares the gourmet and specialty breads. A number of part-time and seasonal employees completes the cropping and retailing team.

And it is retailing that is the driving force behind this successful family farm operation. The Brown's commitment to taking their commodities direct from field to consumer is greater than ever, with the addition of the new facility set among the rows of apple trees.

From the market's location high on the hill above the orchard's acres, visitors can look out over the sweeping vista of row after row of manicured fruit trees. It's a view, especially when colored with the pastels of blooming trees or the blaze of a sunset, that the Browns never tire of sharing. A more perfect setting for a market would be hard to find.

"This is why we're here," say the Browns. "We enjoy working with the public and take pride in producing a high-quality fruit for our customers. We did this because it's what we want to do."

The Brown family has always been highly supportive of both civic and agricultural activities. Stan is a member of the Dallastown School Board and local planning commission and he works with the state horticultural association. He was assistant and then fire chief for the Loganville Fire Company for a total of 2 years. When he stepped down from that position recently, the company elected his son, Scott, as their chief. Stan continues to serve as a leader in county firefighting supervisory organizations.

Nona has been active in various church and community groups, and served for several years as organizational leader for the Loganville Community 4-H club, and on the county's 4-H advisory board.

Scott and his wife, Brenda, live nearby, and their four-year-old daughter Amanda is a "fruitlover" and frequent visitor to the market. Linda, chief dietician at the Suffolk, Va., community hospital, will be married later this year. And David, the youngest, is a senior at Indiana University of Pennsylvania, majoring in management information systems, and currently working on a cooperative program with a Cockeysville, Maryland, firm.

Milk Your Kids Will Love To Drink

We never outgrow our need for milk. Even though our caloric needs and metabolic rates decrease as we get older, everyone requires the same nutrients needed since childhood.

Milk is a food packed with nutrients, exceptionally high in calcium. Since it also contains protein, riboflavin and other vitamins and minerals, you can use it to meet many of your nutritional needs without consuming too many calories.

Now is a good time to provide milk for your family. Milk production reaches a seasonal peak in June and will be in heavy supply, according to USDA marketing specialists.

Your need for milk changes with age. Children under nine need two to three servings of fluid milk or equivalent in foods rich in milk per day. From ages nine to 12, children need three servings. Teens require four servings; pregnant women, three servings; nursing mothers, four servings; and adults, two servings.

Do you have trouble getting young children to drink milk? Keep it in the coldest part of your refrigerator so you can serve it cold and fresh. Try some of the following recipes, either as breakfast treats or desserts.

Tempting Pineapple Milk Freeze: Use equal parts of crushed pineapple, vanilla ice cream and milk. Mix well and chill until firm. Serve with a spoon and a straw.

Orange Egg Nog: Stir ¼ cup frozen orange juice into ½ cup chilled milk. Add a beaten egg and 1 tablespoon confectioners sugar. Top with grated nutmeg.

Honey Orange Milk Cooler: Add 1 teaspoon honey to the orange egg nog mixture. Place in refrigerator until icy cold. Serve with a slice of orange perched on the rim of the glass. Be sure to use only clean, uncracked eggs for making egg nog.

Peppermint Milk Shake: Add crushed peppermint stick candy to chilled milk. Place in refrigerator until candy is completely dissolved. Add more milk if desired. Pour into glass and top with scoop of ice cream and shaved sweet chocolate.

Will Vitamin Supplements Reduce Stress?

Stress is not merely nervous tension but the response of the body to any demand upon it. Stress may be pleasant or unpleasant; what defines it as stress is that it places a demand upon the body for readjustment or adaptation.

Many people take vitamin and mineral supplements to help their bodies respond to stress. It is known that blood levels of vitamins change in response to stress. Little is known, however, about the effect of having an argument on, for example, vitamin C requirements because most stress research has been done on persons suffering from burns or other severe physical trauma. The change in blood levels often reflects a change in storage site, not an actual deficiency. Some researchers believe that supplementation carries a greater risk of harm than benefit.

We cannot avoid stress completely; in fact the complete absence of stress is death. However, we can learn to lessen stress to the point where it is stimulating and not disease-producing. We must learn what is and is not worth fighting over in our lives. Vitamin and mineral supplements are a poor substitute for that kind of judgment.

STRAWBERRY PARFAIT PIE

1 10-ounce package strawberry halves, thawed
1 3-ounce package strawberry or mixed fruit gelatin
1 pint vanilla or strawberry ice cream
1 baked 9-inch pastry shell, cooled

Drain strawberries, measuring syrup. Add water to syrup to make 1 cup. Bring liquid to a boil; then add gelatin and stir until dissolved. Spoon in ice cream, stirring until melted and smooth. Remove from heat; stir in remaining 1 cup orange juice. Chill until mixture is consistency of unbeaten egg white. Fold in heavy cream. Spoon into Meringue Shells (recipe below) or individual dessert dishes. Makes 6 servings.

Meringue Shells

3 egg whites
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar
1/8 teaspoon salt
¾ cup sugar

Beat egg whites until foamy; add cream of tartar and salt; beat until stiff but not dry. Add the sugar gradually, beating until very stiff. Cover baking sheet with aluminum foil or heavy brown paper. Pile meringue into 6 rounds, about 3 inches in diameter. Make a 2-inch depression in the center. Bake in a 275°F. oven for 1 hour. Makes 6 meringues.

PINEAPPLE DELIGHT

SPICED PINEAPPLE ISLAND

1 15½-ounce can chunk pineapple in syrup OR 1 20-ounce can crushed pineapple in syrup
3 tablespoons vinegar
12 whole cloves
1 cinnamon stick
2 3-ounce packages or 1 6-ounce package orange flavor gelatin

Drain pineapple, reserving syrup. Add water to syrup to make 3¼ cups. Combine measured liquid, vinegar and spices in saucepan. Bring to a boil, reduce heat and simmer 10 minutes. Strain, discarding spices. Dissolve gelatin in hot liquid. Chill until thickened. Stir in pineapple and pour into 5-cup mold. Chill until firm, about 4 hours. Unmold. Garnish as desired. Makes 10 servings.

To use ground spices: add water to reserved pineapple syrup to make 1¼ cups. Combine gelatin, ½ teaspoon cinnamon and 1/8 teaspoon cloves in bowl. Add 2 cups boiling water and stir until gelatin is dissolved. Add measured liquid and the vinegar. Great with baked ham.

Brown's Berry Beautiful Strawberry Pie

One baked 9-inch pie shell
½ cup sliced, toasted almonds
Creamy Satin Filling
1½ cups fresh strawberries
Shiny Glaze

Cover bottom of baked pie shell with almonds. Cover almonds with Creamy Satin Filling. Chill thoroughly at least three hours, or overnight.

Slice strawberries in halves, reserving a few perfect berries for center of pie. Arrange sliced berries on filling, starting around outer edge. Place some berries cut-side up, to form a pattern. Cover with shiny glaze. Refrigerate one hour or until serving time.

Creamy Satin Filling:
½ cup sugar
3 tablespoons cornstarch
3 tablespoons flour
½ teaspoon salt
2 cups milk
1 egg, slightly beaten
½ cup heavy cream, whipped
1 teaspoon vanilla

Combine cornstarch, sugar, flour and salt in saucepan. Gradually add milk, stirring until smooth. Cook, stirring constantly, until mixture is thick and bubbling. Stir a little of this hot mixture into egg, then add to hot mixture and cook until just bubbling hot again.

Cool, then chill thoroughly. Mixture will be very thick. Beat with mixer until smooth. Fold in whipped cream and vanilla.

Shiny Glaze:

Crush ½ cup fresh strawberries. Add ½ cup water and cook 2 minutes; strain through sieve. Combine ¼ cup sugar and 1 tablespoon cornstarch in small saucepan; stir in berry juice. Cook, stirring constantly, until thick and clear. Cool; spoon carefully over strawberries in pie.

Prepared whipped topping for garnish, optional

In medium bowl, combine cookie crumbs and margarine; mix well. Press into bottom of 8x8-inch baking dish. Chill.

In large bowl, dissolve raspberry gelatin in boiling water. Stir in chilled evaporated milk. Pour half of mixture into blender container or food processor, add half of cream cheese. Process until smooth and creamy; pour into large bowl. Repeat with remaining gelatin mixture and cream cheese. Fold in raspberries and syrup. Chill until slightly thickened; pour into prepared crust. Chill until firm, about 3 hours. Cut into squares to serve. If desired, garnish with prepared topping.

Correction

The Recipe for 'Linda's Vegetable Soup' in the May 17 issue contained an error. The corrected version of the recipe is listed below. Lancaster Farming regrets this error.

LINDA'S VEGETABLE SOUP

1 large can chunky chicken vegetable or beef soup
2 cups frozen mixed vegetables

The following can be altered to individual taste:

1 or 2 large onions, diced
¼ cup green peppers, diced
½ cup celery, diced
Left over boiled potatoes, cut small
¼ cup rolled barley flakes
Pepper to taste

Twin Valley FFA

The Twin Valley parliamentary procedure team recently earned a first place award in Berks County FFA competition. Members of the team were president Beth Morgan, vice president Kevin Stoltzfus, secretary Sue Burkhart, treasurer Mike Stoltzfus, reporter Bob Bell, sentinel Rick Hicks, chaplain Rich Slonaker, and junior advisor Ann Kline.

The parliamentary procedure contest challenges teams and FFA chapters to learn the fundamentals of running a meeting properly. The basics of parliamentary procedure are taught in most vocational agriculture classes as part of a leadership unit.

The top teams from each county compete in the area contests, with winners there going on to eastern Pennsylvania competition and state FFA competition.

QUESTION - Mrs. Samuel Fisher, Ronks, would like a recipe for corn chips.

QUESTION - Celia Dickinson, Fredericksburg, Va., would like a recipe for easy-to-make yeast rolls QUESTION - Mrs. Stella Myszkowski, West Reading, asked for Friendship Cake recipes. Thanks go to Mrs. Ray W. Seidel, Lenhartsville, for the following recipe. However, Mrs. Myszkowski still needs a recipe for the starter. Can anyone help?

Friendship Cake

1 cup starter

Stir 2 times daily, morning and night. Keep container closed - do not refrigerate.

Day 1, 2, 3, 4 - Stir.

Day 5 add:

1 cup flour

1 cup sugar

1 cup milk

Day 6, 7, 8, 9 - Stir.

Day 10 - (see day 5) Add the same ingredients, then stir. Take out 1 cup (3 times) and put in 3 different containers and give to 3 friends with a copy of the recipe.

Add to remaining batter:

⅔ cup oil

3 eggs

2 cups flour

1 cup sugar

1½ teaspoons cinnamon

2 teaspoons baking powder

½ teaspoon salt

1½ teaspoons baking soda

Beat until smooth and add any of the following: 1 cup of each - apples, nuts and raisins OR 1 cup of each - coconut, pineapple (drained) and nuts OR 3 cups mashed bananas or blueberries.

Bake in a tube pan for 1 hour at 350° F. or until done.

ANSWER - Hattie Diehl, Mifflinburg, asked for a recipe to make homemade soap from wood ashes. Thanks go to April Dudko, Telford, for the following advice.

Homemade Soap

To make lye using ashes, it is necessary to drip water through the ashes and collect it The ashes from a winter's worth of wood burning should be sufficient. Using a large kettle or iron washpot, put in the lye water (about 1 gallon) and add 2 pounds of grease. Any fat can be used - bacon, beef, etc. - as long as it is melted and strained. Stir to combine and put on a fire. Stir until mixture becomes very thick. Pour into an enamel pan and allow to cool. Cut into bars. This recipe can be increased by increasing the amount of lye water and grease. CAUTION: Do Not Use Aluminum!

To remove fish odor from your hands, rub them with a thin slice of lemon.

Adams Is Wyoming-Lackawanna Dairy Princess

BY BARBARA MILLER
Lycoming County Correspondent

TUNKHANNOCK — Christina Adams received the Wyoming-Lackawanna dairy princess crown during festivities at Moose Hall, Tunkhannock, May 24.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Adams, Mehoopany, Christina was the only contestant in this year's contest. But even though she stood alone, judge Ralph Sands noted, Christina could have stood lots of competition.

The dimpled, blue-eyed brunette received a perfect score in every category, including general appearance and speaking ability, personality and poise, and industry knowledge, Sands said.

In addition to working on the farm, Christina is a member of the band and honor society. She also plays on the field hockey and basketball teams. Presently a junior at Tunkhannock High School, she plans to attend college or business school after graduation.

"I understand what farmers go through," Christina replied in answer to a question concerning qualities she may possess that would make her a good dairy princess. She knows what it is like to get up early, she said. Further, she noted, she would like to see something done to help farmers who have remained in the business after the dairy termination buyout but who are receiving smaller milk checks.

In her farewell remarks, Jill Kitz, 1985-86 Wyoming-Lackawanna county dairy princess, noted she made 205 appearances and spoke to 7,040 people. Although acknowledging that the hardest part was talking to peers in her own high school, Jill said she enjoyed speaking to children during school promotions the most.

Jill said her enthusiasm for being dairy princess really began at the three-day dairy princess seminar at Lycoming College, when, "I saw the need for dairy princesses to straighten out misconceptions about the dairy industry."

She encouraged the new princess to strive for the highest achievement. She recalled that she was elected second runner-up for the state pageant last year.

Jill thanked many for their help, including her family and the dairy princess committee. She dedicated her dairy princess activities of the past year to her mother, who passed away within the year.

The pageant was judged by Jean Castrogiovanni, Montrose; Ralph Sands, Wyoming; and Harry Wilson, Tunkhannock.

During the pageant Jill and 1985-86 alternates Tammy Smith and Lynn Zajac received plaques for their work on behalf of the dairy industry.

Members of the dairy princess committee in charge of the program were Delores Hirkey, chairman; Bob Parr, vice chairman; Alice Sherwood, secretary-treasurer; Laureen Naylor, Judy Johnson, Bonnie Gregory, Elwood White and Michelle Hirkey.

Emcee was Hoyt Keiser, general manager, Radio Station WEMR, Tunkhannock. Entertainment was provided by Bobby Parr and Phil Weeks, who performed a guitar duet.

Christina Adams was crowned 1986-87 Wyoming-Lackawanna County dairy princess in Tunkhannock last Saturday.

THE MICRO WAY

Microwave Individual Cookies

One day my boys and I decided to make toll house cookies in the microwave...

We carefully followed the directions I found for another cookie recipe, and baked them in a ring on a piece of waxed paper...

Boy, were we surprised at the results! The spoonfuls of dough melted into a giant cookie puddle on the paper. (I must admit though, it was a delicious puddle we scraped off and ate!)

That's when I discovered that most conventional cookie recipes for individual cookies just don't work in a microwave. They have too much shortening and sugar to bake properly.

There are however, microwave cookie recipes, with different proportions. So, another day we baked Microwave Toll House cookies. These cooked properly, but didn't taste as good as our puddle because of the increased flour.

The sad truth is that most microwave baked cookies are a real disappointment. They don't brown; it's hard to tell when they're done; most aren't crispy; and they taste too doughy. But wait, not all cookies are such failures.

Bar or pan cookies, which are cooked together and cut apart do bake well in the microwave. Also, some conventional recipes for cookies that are rolled into a ball before baking (like peanut butter cookies) will cook well in your microwave. And I have come up with a few microwave recipes that are good enough to share with you!

In fact, using a microwave for children to bake cookies is a good idea. They can't get burned on the oven or cookie "sheets"; the two-minute baking time matches their attention span; and I haven't found a child yet that didn't like to roll balls of dough! (Though the balls aren't always round.)

Clip these recipes to save for a rainy day this summer when the kids have nothing to do. You'll both be glad you did!

These peanut butter kisses are fun to make, because you can't make them in the oven.

The kiss on top becomes molten when microwaved, but holds it's shape, which it won't do in the oven. Be warned though, they disappear instantly when served!

Peanut Kisses

½ cup (1 stick) margarine or butter
½ cup peanut butter
½ cup confectioner's sugar
1 large egg
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 ½ cups flour
¾ cups quick cooking oatmeal
A little milk, if needed
50 to 60 chocolate candy kisses

1. Soften margarine and peanut butter in a glass or plastic mixing bowl by microwaving on medium low (30,3) for 1 minute. Cream together, then add sugar, egg and vanilla, beating well after each addition. Stir in flour and oats until well mixed.

2. Roll dough into 1-inch balls. If dough is too crumbly to hold together, add 1 to 2 tablespoons milk.

3. Put a piece of waxed paper on a large dinner plate or flat microsafe platter (glass pizza plate, plastic tray, or piece of cardboard cut to fit your oven). Put 8 to 9 cookies on the waxed paper in a ring. Unwrap the kisses, and press one kiss down into the middle of each ball.

4. Microwave on medium (50,5) for 1½ to 2 minutes, until the dough just turns dull-looking and is no longer glossy. The dough will still be quite soft. Do not bake until the dough is firm, or you will break your teeth eating the cookies!

5. Slide waxed paper to a cooling rack and let stand for 4 to 5 minutes. Remove the cookies from the waxed paper with a spatula, and leave on rack to finish cooling.

6. Repeat with remaining dough. Makes 50 to 60 cookies.

Tips: I use two cardboard cookie "sheets" and two pieces of waxed paper, alternating one in oven, one on rack, etc. The waxed paper may be used over again.

–If desired, the hot chocolate kisses can be spread flat into icing for the cookie as soon as you move it to the rack to cool. (However, the kids all insist that the iced cookies aren't as good as the kiss cookies!)

–If you have a favorite "ball" cookie recipe, use these basic baking directions to try baking it in the microwave.

These brownie-like cookies are easy to make, but they "crackle" better if the dough is refrigerated overnight before baking.

Chocolate Crackles

2 eggs
⅓ cup vegetable shortening
1 two-layer devils food cake mix with pudding in mix
¼ cup finely chopped nuts
Powdered sugar

1. Beat eggs and shortening until well mixed. Stir in cake mix and nuts.

2. Roll dough into 1-inch balls and chill before baking. (Overnight is best).

3. Put a piece of waxed paper on a large dinner plate or flat microsafe platter (glass pizza plate, plastic tray, or piece of cardboard cut to fit your oven). Roll each dough ball in powdered sugar, and put 8 to 9 cookies on the waxed paper in a ring. Keep cookies at least 2-inches apart, because they puff up and then flatten way out as they "crackle."

4. Microwave on medium (50,5) for 1½ to 2 minutes, until the dough just turns dull-looking and is no longer glossy. The dough will still be quite soft. Do not bake until the dough is firm.

5. Slide waxed paper to a cooling rack and let stand 4 to 5 minutes. Remove the cookies from the waxed paper with a spatula, and leave on rack to finish cooling.

6. The waxed paper may be used over again. Repeat with remaining dough. Makes 50 to 60 cookies.

TIPS: The cookies can, if desired, be baked immediately without refrigeration, but they won't "crackle" as much. The balls of dough will keep several days, covered, in the refrigerator.

NOTE: The times above are for microwaves with 600 to 700 watts of power; for 500 to 600 W, add 10 seconds to each minute; for 400 to 500 W, add 20 seconds to each minute.

Tiny Florida Sparrows Face Extinction Because of Lost Habitat

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — The protective custody of a $60,000 cage on an obscure island in Walt Disney World is no fantasylane for the most endangered bird on Earth.

Tortured and ignored by man until it was too late, exiled forever from their salt marsh homeland, the last four dusky seaside sparrows flit about in desperate luxury, waiting for the end to come.

They are all males, 7 to 10 years old, brought in from the wild in 1979 and 1980. No female has been seen since 1975. The one male that evaded capture was last seen on July 23, 1980. Sometime within the next few years, barring a miracle, the dusky seaside sparrow (Ammospiza maritima nigrescens) will be the first vertebrate creature to suffer extinction since the Endangered Species Act was passed in 1973.

Natural Home Destroyed

Over $5 million has been spent since 1970 trying to save the tiny sparrow. Yet its small, isolated habitats were poisoned, flooded, burned and built upon so severely that the sparrow could no longer survive in freedom. Last October, after two decades of feuding, scientists and government wildlife officials threw in the towel and permitted Walt Disney World to take the final progeny off the public payroll.

There, surrounded by other endangered species on little-publicized Discovery Island, Disney biologists will attempt to breed the four males with similar seaside sparrows — a genetic "backcrossing" experiment that, if successful, could eventually produce a hybrid sparrow with over 98 percent of the dusky's genes and characteristics.

"I'm well aware of the risk involved," says Charles Cook, director of Discovery Island, a habitation of rare animals and birds from around the world. The island annually attracts less than 1 percent of all Disney visitors.

"You get people thinking and talking about the dusky and you might not save these last few but you might save something else," says Cook.

Now in Seclusion

The last four males, housed under heavy security, will not be displayed to the public. Instead, Scott's seaside sparrows and other close relatives of the dusky will take part in what Cook calls an "interpretative display."

A diorama will explain the bird's history, habits, and habitat, as well as the reasons for its impending extinction — an especially dramatic event considering that the mere presence of Disney World, less than an hour from the dusky's final range, had a direct effect on the sparrow's destruction.

The little bird's range has always been limited to the St. Johns River floodplain west of Titusville and the tidal marshes of North Merritt Island, in Brevard County. Before man intruded, thousands of the timorous sparrows inhabited the vast short-grass savannahs of both areas.

It is doubtful more than a few Floridians have even seen a dusky seaside sparrow. Weighing less than an ounce, it is a black and white canary-sized bird which spent most of its time darting about the ground rather than treetops. It is the most distinctive of all the seaside sparrows that range the vanishing coastal salt marshes from New England to Mexico.

Undoubtedly, the sparrow's inconspicuous place in the animal kingdom hierarchy — far below the flamboyant eagles and whooping cranes — would later contribute to its downfall. "The rule of thumb is: If it weighs less than a pound and is smaller than a breadbox, nobody cares," is the candid observation of Bill Leenhouts of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Assaulted By DDT

The dusky's troubles began immediately after World War II when the Brevard County Mosquito Control District tried to rid Merritt Island of the salt marsh mosquito — a serious obstacle to the growth that was expected in this virgin area. Massive spraying of DDT and other pesticides contributed to the 75 percent drop in dusky numbers between 1946 and 1962.

When the National Aeronautics and Space Administration acquired the area in 1962, engineers flooded as much of it as possible so the mud-breeding mosquitoes would have no place to lay their eggs.

It worked. It also destroyed the marsh. By 1968, only 70 pairs of duskies remained on Merritt Island, which by then, ironically, was a Fish and Wildlife refuge. Meanwhile, University of Wisconsin graduate student Brian Sharp found nearly 900 pairs of duskies on the St. Johns marsh — an area which had not been explored by ornithologists since Charles Maynard first discovered the dusky there a century before.

But this was 1969 — not a good environmental year in this part of the globe. The space program was at its peak; man would walk on the moon by summer. Brevard's population had grown 800 percent since NASA moved in. And, a few miles inland, construction had begun on the world's largest family entertainment complex — Walt Disney World.

One of the last four dusky seaside sparrows in the world lives out his days in a habitat created for him and his three kin on an island in Walt Disney World. No female of the apparently doomed species has been seen for almost a decade. Its natural habitat on the floodplain near Florida's Atlantic coast was devastated by highways, range fires, and growth associated with the space program.

To facilitate an expected overload of traffic and to provide a safer, more direct route from Brevard beaches to Disney World, the state built the controversial Bee Line Expressway — which split into a Y right in the middle of the most populous dusky habitat.

The Endangered Species Act, among a host of environmental laws passed since 1969, would make it impossible to build that highway today. "One day there was a marsh," says Florida Audubon ornithologist Herb Kale, who led a losing battle against the Bee Line, "and the next there was a highway."

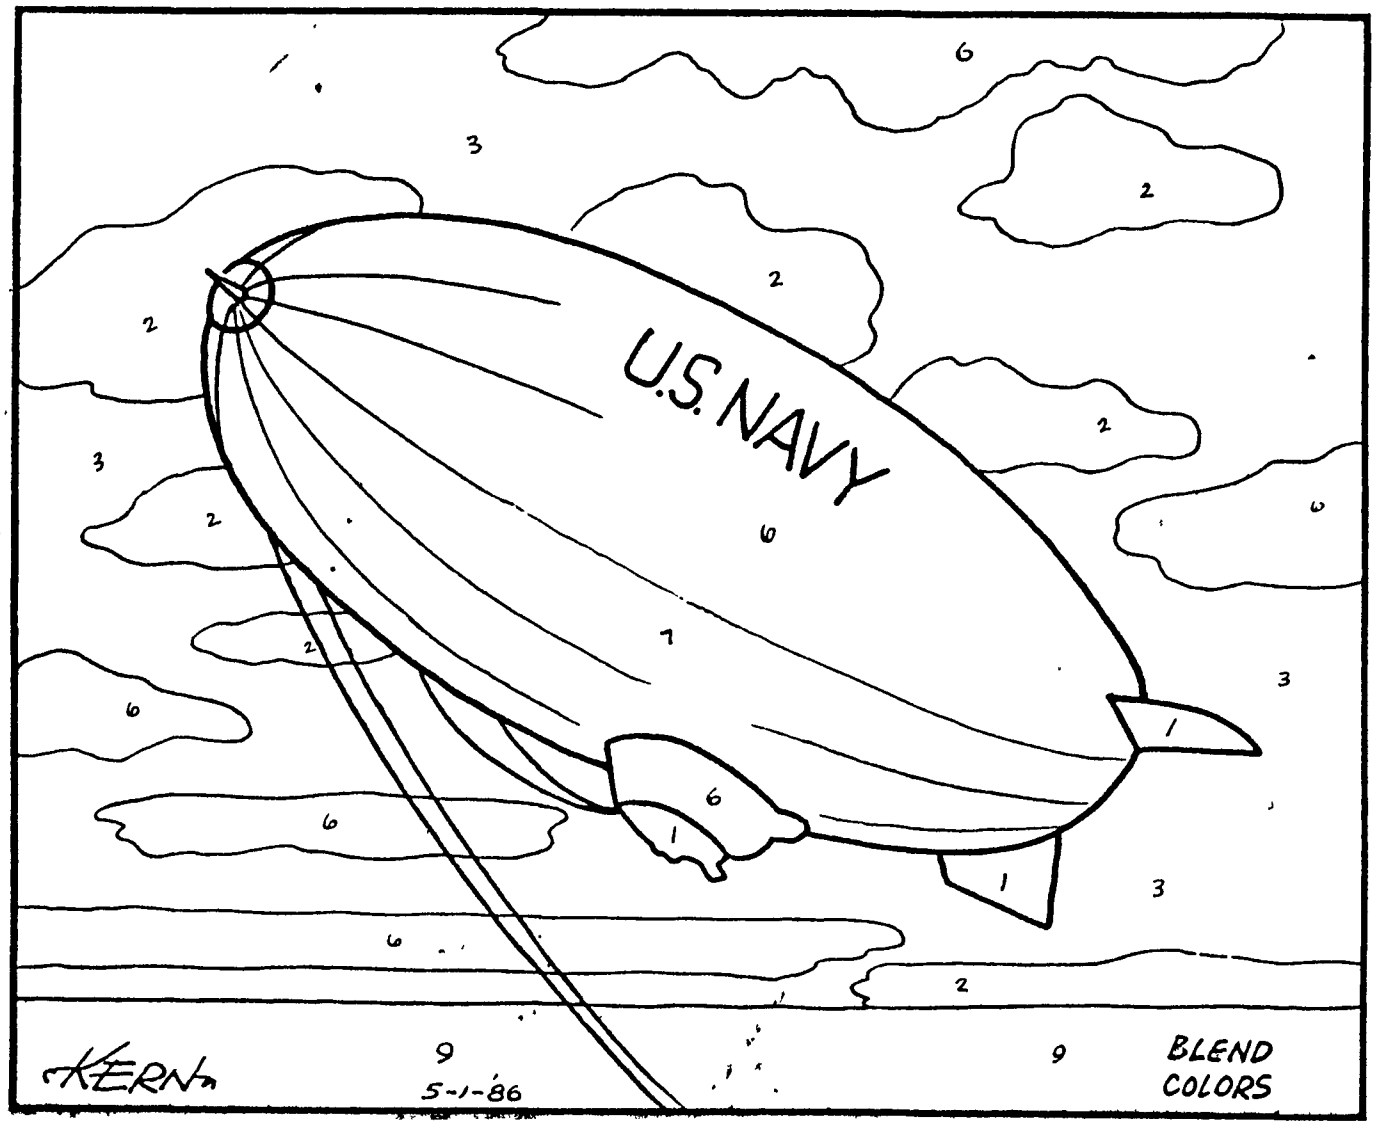
HELIUM IS A VERY LIGHT GAS. BLIMPS ARE OFTEN FILLED WITH HELIUM BECAUSE THIS GAS WILL NOT BURN. IN 1868 SCIENTISTS DISCOVERED HELIUM IN THE SUN. 30 YEARS LATER THEY DISCOVERED IT ON THE EARTH. HELIUM IS FOUND IN NATURAL GAS. ALMOST ALL OF IT IS PRODUCED IN THE UNITED STATES.



Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

Everyday is different around here. Naturally, some are good and some are rather bad.

Last week I stopped at a friend's house to have her catalog some antique "cup plates" that I have. These pressed pattern flint glass, known as "Sandwich glass," were used to set teacups on as people drank their tea from the saucer.

What I didn't expect was the big box of herbs that she gave me. So, despite the fact that I was doing a lot of extra cleaning, as I expected guests for several meals, I dug a plot and planted them. It was necessary to remove some tansy and lemon balm to make room for the tarragon, chives, anise, sage and basil. As we had an inch of rain soon afterwards, I believe they will all survive the transplanting.

Then came the day when I did an unusual thing. I do not turn off alarm clocks and go back to sleep but on this particular day I did just that. It was Primary Election Day and I was to sit at the polls all day and "work." As I skipped breakfast, I arrived only a few minutes late but I can't say that I "worked." The turnout was very light and we had plenty of extra time to catch up on the news.

We had hoped to have a herdsman working for us this summer. However, a phone call informed us that he had a badly broken ankle and could not be on his feet for two months. Now we have the problem of finding other help.

I suppose that we better not count on using the boat very often that Allen bought this winter. But, we still hope that we will at least have a chance to try a bit of fishing now and then.

Shared Holiday Seeks Host Families

The Shared Holiday Program, Lancaster's own version of the 'fresh air' program, is seeking persons to serve as host families.

The program will be accepting applications until June 16. If you would like to become a host family or would like more information, contact Ellen Mellinger-Blouch at 291-2261.

Sparrows Face Extinction

the Bee Line a veritable "ghost road" for 10 years. Out-of-control forest fires, started by nearby ranchers who wished to clear their lands for grazing, swept over the dusky's areas many times. By spring 1979, there were 13 males left on the St. Johns marsh, none at all on Merritt Island.

Fish and Wildlife then ordered the capture of all dusky seaside sparrows. No females were found. Five males were brought to Santa Fe Community College Teaching Zoo in Gainesville. There scientists and officials continued their fighting, this time over the philosophical right to "crossbreed" the birds. The argument prevented the experiment for two crucial mating seasons.

"I know it is impossible to save everything. But why commit aggravated assault on nature?" asks Jim Ellis, who directs the nation's only collegiate teaching zoo. "People come in and say, 'What a waste of money on a few lousy sparrows' But, unfortunately, most people don't see the future.

"What are we going to do about the St. Johns River? The dusky is at the headwaters there. The dusky is gone. You have fish kills out there. The nanatee is in trouble. How many species does it take before you realize that the whole river may be in trouble?"

Who Hears It Fall?

Fish and Wildlife finally agreed to permit crossbreeding — if taxpayers were spared the considerable cost. Nudged by Florida Audubon, Disney officials agreed to take on the $100,000 annual cost of maintaining the breeding the final diskies.

It was all done secretly, without public announcement. But proper message is there, says Cook:

"It's like a tree that falls in the woods. If no one hears it, who knows it fell? The dusky will fall in the woods and it will be passing news. That's not right. We want people to see and hear about this. Extinction is forever. And here we are tasting it."

On being a farm wife - And other hazards

Joyce Bupp

Time marches on. Yes, yes, I know it's a trite cliche. But it's true.

The mirror tells me that every morning. Plus, there's a middle school kid on the premises who makes a point of telling me that about once an hour — or everytime he runs me down in the kitchen in his eternal quest for food.

Just as we change and wear out — eek! another gray hair — with the mounting years, so do those implements with which we work and live.

We're talking repair here, folks. Repair as in veteran equipment, and vital organ transplants of head gaskets, gear systems, chopping knives and gathering chains. To say nothing of aging automobiles, tired pickup trucks, cranky washing machines and a dishwasher that occasionally has an accident on the kitchen floor.

And typewriters. For ten years now, the sound of a clattering typewriter has been as much a part of the farmstead background noise as has the hum of the milk-cooling compressors and bawling cattle.

My first ancient office sidekick was acquired some 20 years ago during my very first secretarial job out of school. It eventually retired to be replaced by a portable electric model, which came under such heavy abuse it blew a key at least once every six months and needed emergency surgery — invariably on a deadline day.

Its replacement was a like-new, heavy-duty office model, which has served faithfully many years, with just occasional lapses into $45-per-hour house-call depression.

The last time we settled for the damages, the verdict was terminal: "They don't make parts for this model any longer."

For years the writing — so to speak — had been on the wall. Friends and acquaintances, with glowing enthusiasm, waxed poetic about the joys of a word processor (translate "computer").

Thus it came to be some time back that I plunged into the personal computer age, shoved by a dying typewriter, two teenagers with word processing needs for school and college, and a prices-slashed sale on all the necessary components.

Twenty-four hours later, the first finished copy clicked into black and white. And there was new appreciation for the school training that made a 14-year-old computer-wise.

I have since become slave to this quarter-inch white square which flashes at me, hour after hour, marking the spot of writing progress. It's called a "cursor." (Well-named, too.) The flashing cursor is the equivalent of a machine sitting and drumming its fingers impatiently on the table, grumbling: "Get on with it, will ya?"

Not only does it grumble-flash, this bossy machine also burps, when a wrong control is hit, and prints out a stern lecture on obeying instructions when some goof is keyed in. Sort of like having another kid in the family, except for not having to wash its clothes.

But it also remembers, erases, adds, moves around and does all sorts of hi-tech writing stuff. The kid interrupts the endless quest for food long enough to enter cattle registry data on the freebie filing program that hitchhiked in with the other boxes. Homework writing assignments are faced with considerably more interest, too. (And, thanks to a super-generous, disc-sharing brother-in-law, the arcade sounds of battling alien invaders, bugs and exploding rocketships whirr and crash late into the evening.)

Which leads to invalidate another trite cliche! You can teach an old dog new tricks.

See, let me show you how this works when I just put my paws here on this keyboard . . .

Yonna Taylor Tops Competition to Become Bradford County Dairy Princess

BY BILL RALPH

TROY — A Canton High School junior, Yonna Taylor, became the 1986 Bradford County Dairy Princess when the judges chose her from among three hopefuls. The pageant to elect this year's dairy princess was held in Troy, Saturday evening, May 25 at the Troy High School auditorium.

Choked with emotion and holding back tears of joy, Miss Taylor was crowned by her predecessor, Melissa Wilcox, who placed the rhinestone diadem on Yonna's head amid the cheers and applause from several hundred visitors and friends assembled there.

Bradford County dairy princess Yonna Taylor receives congratulations from her parents, Duane and JanNeita Taylor.

The judges also chose contender Karen Cole of Troy as the first alternate dairy princess and Shelly Brown of Rome as the second alternate.

To assist the judges in their decisions, each candidate was asked to give a short presentation. Miss Taylor appeared on stage dressed in a football player's uniform, dancing and singing "Milk's a great health kick."

Yonna Taylor grew up on her parent's dairy farm located in the far Southwest corner of Bradford County. The farm has been in the Taylor family for over 100 years. The Taylors milk 48 cows, mostly Holsteins, except for two Jersey cows which her father, Duane Taylor keeps for sentimental reasons in memory of his grandfather, who kept Jersey cows.

Duane Taylor is an ordained minister in the Disciples of Christ Church. Yonna's mother, JanNeita Taylor, is a substitute teacher and Yonna plans to pursue a teaching career in elementary education after finishing high school.

The outgoing dairy princess, Melissa Wilcox held back tears as she delivered the traditional farewell address, thanking her family, the people of Bradford County and the press for their support. "I've learned a lot about myself," said Melissa. "It's been a most rewarding experience."

The alternate dairy princess, Karen Cole, is the daughter of Donald and Sandy Cole, who operate the High Spruce Dairy Farm near Troy. Second alternate, Shelley Brown comes from a large dairy farm operated by her parents, Larry and Lois Brown, and Larry's brother, Bob Brown near Rome.

Master of ceremonies for the evening was attorney Patrick Barrett, who skillfully guided the sometimes nervous girls through their routines. Judges were Donna Lee Simpson of Simolot Farms near Mansfield, Pa., Gordon Wood of Gor-Wood Farms, also near Mansfield; and Bobby Jones, vice president of Northeastern Farm Credit Service of Lewisburg.

The Cobblestones, a group of students from the Troy schools, led and instructed by Sherry Ayers, entertained the audience with seveal song and dance routines.

The dairy princess pageant is sponsored by the Bradford County Dairy Princess Committee in cooperation with the Bradford County Dairy Promotion Assoc. Barbara LaMont coordinated the project. Organ music was provided by Ellen Foust.

Lycoming County Dancers Square Off in Repaired Barn To Benefit 4-H

BY BARBARA MILLER
Lycoming Co. Correspondent

WILLIAMSPORT — Seventeen squares of dancers recently promenaded in a barn whose roof was ripped off by a tornado last May.

For the tenth consecutive year the Bald Eagle Creek 4-H Club held its annual square dance at the Burton Stamen farm, Montgomery. It was also a celebration for the Stamen family, whose barn was again complete with a new, round, clear spanned roof. The Stamens, Burton Sr. and wife, Marjorie, and their sons Burton Jr., Eric and wife, Lori, farm 200 acres and milk a herd of 80 registered Holsteins.

Shortly after the dance last May a tornado touched down in the Elimsport area, cutting a swath of destruction miles in length. The tornado not only sheared off the Stamens' barn roof, but extensively damaged their home, garage, and vehicles.

The Stamens weren't surprised when neighbors streamed in to help, for they'd experienced such a caring attitude 10 years before. At that time their original barn had burned and with the help of nieghbors was rebuilt.

Some farmers baled hay from their own fields to fill the Stamen barn. According to Burt Jr., the first dance was held then to thank everyone who helped with the barn building.

The last two years, Burt Jr. notes, they've had well over 200 people attending the dance on their 100-by-60 barn floor. The barn has accommodated as many as 19 squares at one time. This year the Lycoming County Holstein Association helped sponsor the dance.

Although there are a number of square dances in the area, actual barn dances are rare. They afford nonrural people a taste of the farming life.

"It is a perfect night for a square dance," someone observed.

She was right. It was a balmy you-feel-like-16 again spring night!

After the guests parked their cars in a nearby field, some petted the calves in nearby hutches on their way to entering the pulled back barn doors to pay admission. Spotlights hung from the cathedral-like ceiling and the band played from a two-haywagon stage.

Guests either danced or sat upon bales of hay encircling the floor. Or tucked away here and there, they perched upon bags of feed or a grain drill or just leaned against a feed mixer. If thirsty, they found the corner of the barn with two old bathtubs full of soda covered with ice.

"It's a lot of fun," Burt Jr. observed "You get to see a lot of people you see once a year."

Tornadoes aside, the Stamen family plans to continue the tradition of the barn dance for years to come.

Square dancers swing their partners during the Bald Eagle Creek 4-H Club annual dance at the Burton Stamen farm. The roof of the barn was destroyed by a tornado last May, but it was repaired in time for this year's dance.

Let's Celebrate

Well, recently I experienced another traumatic event...an additional candle on the birthday cake. It's not that I feel old, it's just that in my younger years I thought this age was old.

Regardless of the number of years, birthdays have always been special occasions in my family. We hold such favorite traditions as choosing our favorite type of cake, having our ears pulled, getting birthday presents, and throwing big parties on our fifth and 16th birthdays. Many people share this kind of birthday tradition. Recently, my father-in-law shared a new tradition with me. He showed me a photo of himself under the table that held the birthday cake. I thought it was most unusual, but it's not for them... it's their own birthday tradition. Whoever is the birthday person has to sit under the table.

Birthdays mark the rite of passage; they mark our progress. Change and growth cannot, of course, be encapsulated in a single day, but these formal events give symbolic representation to our moving forward. Birthdays become occasions that pull us together to give praise or comfort or sustinance to each other. This event carves a space in our busy lives to focus on the family unit and on each individual within it. Birthdays provide an opportunity to take time to say a special, 'I love you.'

Birthday traditions are a lovely way to make a family member feel important. There are many adventurous ways to celebrate. Here are a few ideas.

School age children who have birthdays in the summer often miss sharing their celebrations with friends. Try celebrating the birthday on a half year. Make two cakes at one time and freeze half of one to eat on the real birthday.

Have an only-me birthday dinner. If things in your house are like a zoo and you feel like you have little opportunity to give each child his own space and individuality, try this birthday tradition. Have the child choose his favorite restaurant and take him to dinner alone. This is just his special time where you can talk alone uninterrupted by anyone.

Create a birthday flag for each person in the family. Fly the flag from sunup to sundown on the day of each person's birthday.

Have an annual birthday interview. On each child's birthday, record on cassette tape an interview with him or her. Ask your child to describe special memories about the past year. Add to the recording each year, then play back the previous years.

Try giving some creative gifts. How about tickets to the zoo, a concert, or a movie. For a small child, a large roll of tape to use as he wishes. For parents, a prepaid motel reservation so that they can get away for a little while.

I must admit, birthdays really are special occasions even though I would like to put off the years that go with them. As a matter of fact, birthdays in our family have become a monthly event, rather than just a day. My dad started celebrating his birthday for an entire month preceeding or following the official day. We tease him about it, but it does give all of us a chance to help him celebrate in our own individual way. I guess it's a new tradition in the making.

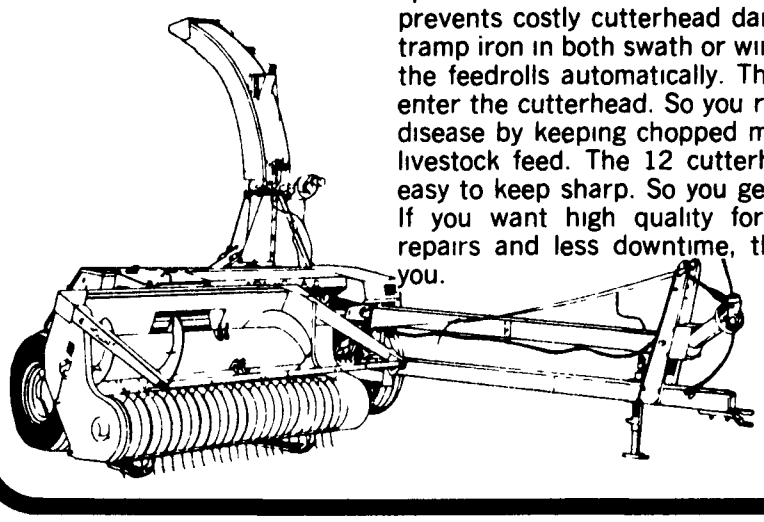
DON'T BE FOOLED BY IMITATIONS -

NO OTHER FORAGE HARVESTER IS EQUIPPED WITH NEW HOLLANDS EXCLUSIVE METALERT II METAL DETECTION SYSTEM. Because the Metalert® II System works so well, you get a FIVE-YEAR GUARANTEE against cutter head "blow-ups" caused by ferrous metals.

MODEL 790

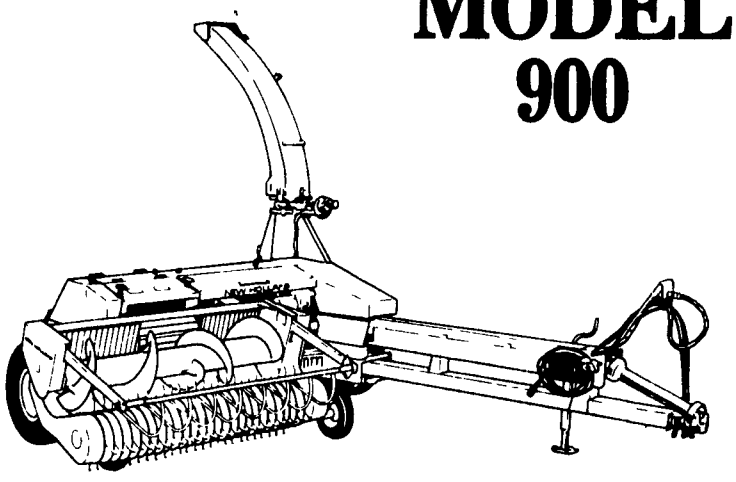
METALERT® II protects cutterheads and cows

When it's time to chop, you want a machine that keeps on going. With the Model 790 the optional Metalert® II electronic metal detector prevents costly cutterhead damage. It detects tramp iron in both swath or windrow and stops the feedrolls automatically. The metal doesn't enter the cutterhead. So you reduce hardware disease by keeping chopped metal out of your livestock feed. The 12 cutterhead knives are easy to keep sharp. So you get a better chop. If you want high quality forage with fewer repairs and less downtime, the "790" is for you.



MODEL 900

Designed for total performance



Step up to better performance with the Model 900 forage harvester from New Holland. The 12 knives of the 21-inch diameter cutterhead deliver uniformly-cut, high-quality forage. Here are just some of the features available that make the "900" a harvester designed for total performance:

- Metalert® II electronic metal detector — protects cutterhead and your valuable animals.
- Electromagnetic clutches — give instant response in controlling feedroll and attachment drives.
- Easy-adjust shearbar — makes adjustment fast and precise.
- Two-speed blower — is energy efficient.
- Hydraulic swing tongue — makes mounting attachments fast and easy.

New ring drive for the Patz Model RD-820 Silo Unloader

NEW RING-DRIVE: Models with the new roller-chain ring drive use only one motor to power the machine.

AUTOMATIC LOWERING: An electric winch lowers the RD-820 automatically after each complete revolution.

GATHERING CHAIN: The Patz cutters and claws cut loose frozen and hard-packed silage efficiently, and then move it to the blower fast.

POWER CUTTER: Spring tension keeps high-speed, self-sharpening blades tight to the silo wall to shave it clean.

TORQUE LIMITER: Ratchet-pin design protects the ring and drive system while working through tough conditions.

Believe It!

The 1600 Series Axial-Flow Combine Is MORE PRODUCTIVE...

WOW!

Owner surveys conducted a few years ago concluded that the AXIAL-FLOW combine harvested more grain per hour, more grain per day, and more grain per acre than previously-owned conventional combines. Now Case-IH has introduced the 1600 series. These new models have larger threshing and separation areas to make them even more productive than the 1400 Series models they replace. So the new models are even MORE PRODUCTIVE. You shouldn't take our word for it - you should try one in your crops. You, too, will say, "WOW."

FOUR MODELS TO CHOOSE FROM

	1620	1640	1660	1680
CASE-IH ENGINE HORSEPOWER	124 HP	150 HP	180 HP	225 HP
GRAIN TANK CAPACITY	125 BUSHELS	145 BUSHELS	180 BUSHELS	210 BUSHELS
- Maximum	6 ROW NARROW	6 ROW WIDE	8 ROW NARROW	8 ROW WIDE
FLEX-HEAD GRAIN PLATFORMS	15' to 20'	15' to 22.5'	15' to 25'	15' to 30'

The Reason Axial-Flow Combines Are More Productive - THE ROTOR!

The Single Rotor design is SIMPLE!

Only a single rotor to thresh and separate. Eliminates the straw-walker assemblies common to conventional combines. Less moving parts means less maintenance, less downtime.

The Single Rotor Design is HIGHER QUALITY GRAIN

Multiple threshing action of axial-flow reduces kernal damage and holds elevator dockage to a minimum.

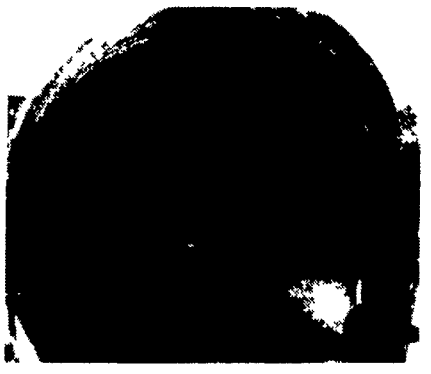
The Single Rotor Design is MORE PRODUCTIVITY!

When your crops are ripe and ready to harvest, Axial-Flow allows you to move faster than with a conventional combine. The rotor's large throat means no bottlenecks up front. You'll be able to harvest at top speed for maximum productivity, even on side-hills.



AN AXIAL-FLOW COMBINE FROM HOOBER'S IS A SAVINGS TO YOU!

York 4-H Preview Offers Glimpse of Season To Come

BY JOYCE BUPP
York Co. Correspondent

YORK — Show season kicked off last weekend for York 4-H beef exhibitors, with the annual 4-H Beef Preview Show Saturday at the York Fairgrounds.

Big winners for the day were Cathy Shive, Seven Valleys, and Paul Miller, Jr., Spring Grove.

Shive's home-bred Angus yearling heifer snagged breed honors and supreme champion in the breeding show, picking up the best bred-and-owned trophy as well. In the judging for Supreme heifer, she bested champion Simmental exhibitor Wayne Stough, Sonja Shearer with her winning Polled Hereford, and Paul Miller's Charolais.

"Chiclets," whose official pedigree paper lists her name as BV Elba 335, is the second generation of purebred Angus winners owned by Cathy. The mother of this stylish heifer won the Seven Valleys teen the reserve champion honors at the Preview Show in 1984.

Other top breeding show winners included reserve champions Jennifer Calderazzo, Angus; Ed Livingston, Polled Hereford, and Nancy Townsend, Simmental. The reserve bred-and-owned award went to the Angus entry of Jim Eisenhour.

Miller's lanky and well-muscled entry, pristine white and towering over contenders, got the nod for grand champion in the steer competition portion of the season opener. Judge Gale Long praised the steer's length and thickness, heavy muscling and noted that he "moves well on his legs and feet."

The Spring Grove 4-H'er purchased his growthy March '85 Charolais x Chianina x Angus calf at the Eastern National Calf Sale. It was bred by Martin MacQueen of West Virginia.

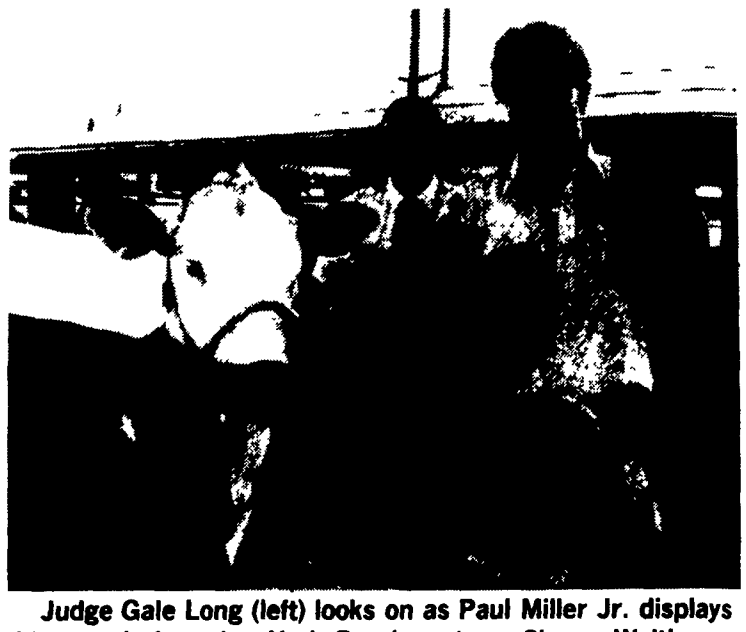
Miller took steer grand champion honors over lightweight division winner Shawn Waltimyer, who earned the reserve grand champion rosette, and Apryl Bowles, mediumweight division champion. Reserve lightweight honors went to Elizabeth Bishard, with Lisa Hoover earning reserve in the mediumweight division and Joe Druck claiming the pink ribbon in the heavyweight classes.

"It was an excellent show," was the assessment of judge Gale Long, herdsman for Nittany Farms near State College. "And the showmanship was excellent. These exhibitors spent a lot of time with their animals; generally at a show this time of year you have calves going in all directions."

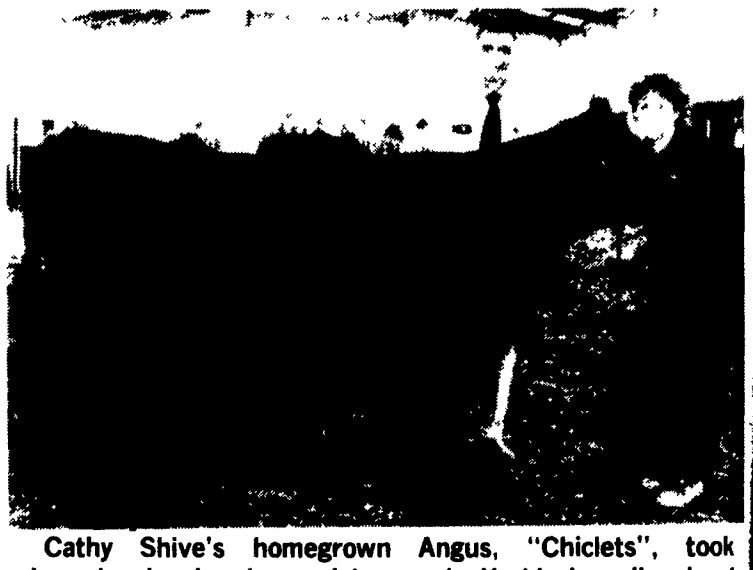
Showmanship did get a share of attention during the preview event, with the nearly 40 exhibitors competing for trophies and feed awards for their showring skills.

Class winners for showmanship were, Joe Druck, senior division; Paul Miller, Jr., intermediate; Kenley Myers, junior; and Jennifer Calderazzo, rookie.

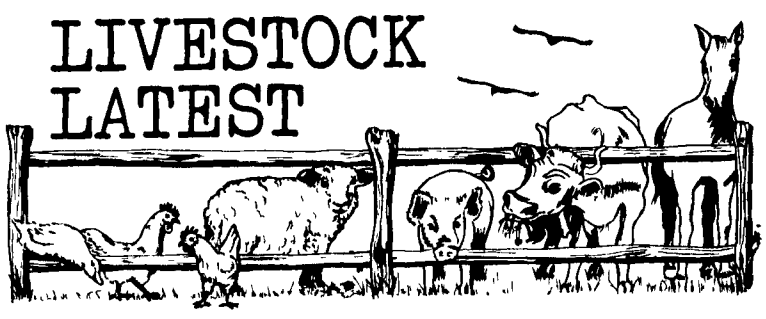
The Preview Show was initiated several years ago as a method of helping 4-H'ers prepareand select their beef project animals for the year. Project steers and heifers are brought to the fairgrounds for weighing and worming at the beginning of the show season, plus steer growth hormone implantation, if members so desire.



Judge Gale Long (left) looks on as Paul Miller Jr. displays his grand champion York Preview steer. Shawn Waltimyer (foreground) had reserve champion.



Cathy Shive's homegrown Angus, "Chiclets", took champion bred-and-owned honors in York's breeding beef show.



Nose News Is Good News

BY JOYCE BUPP
York Co. Correspondent

YORK — There was more than the usual number of black-nosed steers at the York Beef Preview Show last Saturday. Every steer, in fact, sported a black nose, at least temporarily.

This is not some new genetic trend or miracle of ET cloning. It's called "ink."

Nor were the ink-blackened noses the latest in beef show blocking and grooming techniques. There was a legitimate reason for county agent Tony Dobrosky and beef club leaders to be pressing small squares of white cardboard against the ink-blackened noses of 4-H show steers.

It's called noseprinting. And, it's not a new idea. According to Dobrosky, many years ago noseprints were an official way of identifying Jersey cattle on their registry certificates.

Like its cousin, fingerprinting, noseprinting is again becoming an official identification form. It is proving ideal for certain types of livestock which cannot be otherwise differentiated via color markings.

Occasional questions on show eligibility of youth project animals, especially at the January Farm Show, have led officials to seek a better method of positive identification.

Thus, this year all 4-H and FFA project steers and sheep across the state will be noseprinted by local extension and club officials, says Dobrosky. He plans to keep copies of York youth project prints at the local office, while the originals will go on file at Penn State, for later I.D. use as the need arises.

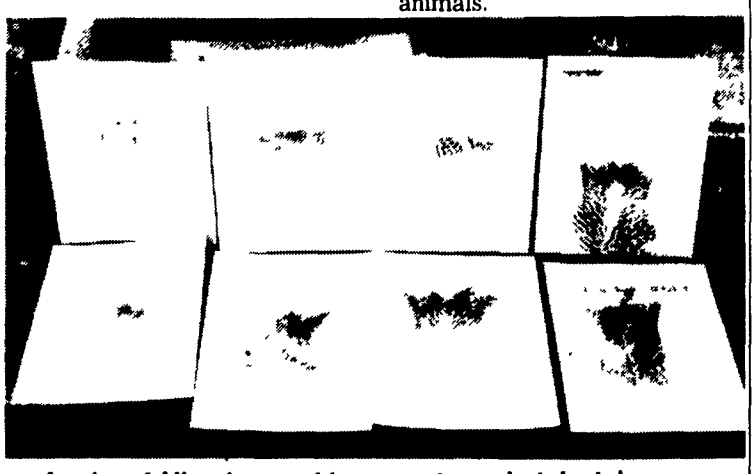
Noseprinting offers other plus points: it's painless, inexpensive, an easily stored piece of information, and accepted proof positive, since each nose print, like a fingerprint, is unique. A noseprint cannot be altered like a freeze brand, nor lost, like an eartag.

To prepare a steer or sheep for noseprinting, the animal's nose is wiped very dry, then pressed against a stamp-pad saturated with non-toxic ink. Immediately, a square of thin, white blotting cardboard, is pressed to the animal's nose. The resulting "modern art" print is the steer's official showring identification.

Steer noseprints, says Dobrosky, are due in the extension livestock offices at Penn State by June 5. Sheep noseprints must be there on file by September 20.

York 4-H and FFA sheep exhibitors can plan to have noseprinting completed during the York Fair. Exhibitors with project animals not taking part in the York Fair sheep shows, should still plan to bring their animals to the York Fair briefly to complete the noseprinting requirements.

Youth exhibitors of steers and sheep are encouraged to call their leaders and extension agents if they have questions on the new noseprinting requirements for project animals.



A wise 4-H'er knows his own steer, but just in case a question should arise, noseprints, such as the ones shown, will be required for all 4-H and FFA beef and sheep in show competition this year.

Beef: A nutritious Bargain

Meat has been the major dietary component for the human race throughout recorded history. The Biblical reference to use a "fatted calf" as the main entree of the feast celebrating the return of the Prodigal Son is an early documentation of the contribution of this muscle food to civilization. Efficient production of ruminants such as cattle has permitted countries such as the United States to provide their citizens the best diet in the world.

Why then are there some people who assume that it is more economical to feed cereal grains to humans than to cattle which produce beef? These misinformed folks fail to recognize that approximately 86 percent of a market steer's diet consists of roughages and milk from the beef cow. In fact, the ruminant animal is one of the most efficient sources for the conversion of otherwise wasted land into human food.

The beef animal is a highly efficient mini-solar condensing factory that converts solar energy and low fertility soil to a nutrient dense food. The approximately 14 percent of the diet of a typical market steer which is cereal grain and other concentrates yields essentially the same amount of useable nutrients after being fed to the animal as if it was fed to humans. The beef animal upgrades the utilization value of these grains and condenses their nutritive value.

Another consumer concern in regards to beef is price at the meat counter. When putting this issue into perspective it is obvious that beef is a good buy. Consider these grocery store products when compared on a price per pound basis:

Item	Price Per Pound
Cheese Puffs	$11.87
Corn Chips	10.90
Cashews	5.46
Peanuts	3.47
Rounds Steak	2.99
Wheat Squares	2.11
Asparagus	1.90
Peanut Butter	1.62
Blade Steak	1.59
Ground Beef	1.29

Guess what! Consumers really can afford to buy good, nutritious beef!

'86 Avian Influenza Costs State $540,000

HARRISBURG — The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture has issued checks totaling $541,011 to poultrymen who incurred expenses and losses in helping eradicate avian influenza from Pennsylvania.

The sum includes $497,570 in indemnities for poultry and eggs destroyed and $43,441 for the cost of cleaning and disinfecting infected farms, according to Dr. Max A. Van Buskirk Jr., director of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Depopulation of 321,000 chickens, turkeys and game birds in 14 flocks was necessary to quell an outbreak of the H5N2 virus this year in Snyder, Fulton, Northumberland, Schuylkill and Lancaster counties. Depopulation expenses amounted to $35,560 and also have been paid.

Eradication expenses were funded through a supplemental appropriation requested by the department and Thornburgh Administration and approved by the General Assembly April 22 in the amount of $1.2 million.

The H5N2 virus, which can kill poultry but does not harm humans, has not been detected in Pennsylvania since April 16 when Lancaster County's only infected flock was depopulated.

"The effectiveness of our surveillance for the disease and sanitation measures adopted by the industry was demonstrated in quickly containing and eradicating this outbreak of the virus," Van Buskirk said.

The department will continue its surveillance program to guard against reintroduction of the disease into Pennsylvania.

"With the procedures in place to prevent, detect and respond to the disease, Pennsylvania is a safe state from which to buy poultry and eggs," Van Buskirk said.

Hawaii, Arkansas and Connecticut are three states which have recognized the success of Pennsylvania's avian influenza controls and have lifted import restrictions on Pennsylvania poultry and eggs.

NW Sheep and Wool Growers Name Directors

BY NANCY KUNICK
Staff Correspondent

CENTERVILLE — Changes are taking place for the Northwest Pennsylvania Sheep and Wool Growers Association in order to better serve their members. This was evident at the annual meeting held May 16 at the Centerville Methodist Church in Crawford County.

The big event for the association is the annual wool pool begun in the late 1930's. The location will be the Crawford County fairgrounds on June 12, rather than 5M Milling in Meadville.

The second major change is the packaging of the wool. The group is considering the purchase of a baler. Bales are preferred to bags by the buyers for transportation purposes.

President Vern Johnson reported on the annual meeting of the State Sheep and Wool Growers Association held May 12 and 13 at State College. He was pleased to announce that Crawford, Mercer and Venango counties garnered the second high bid of $70.10 per hundred for medium staple wool. Banbury Wool Co. of Danville, Ohio is the buyer.

The association has also introduced a new idea for their promotional royalty. Rather than a NW Pennsylvania Lamb and Wool Queen there will be representatives from each geographic area. This year the NW Lamb and Wool Princesses are: Bobbi Foreman, daughter of Richard & Marge Foreman of R.D. 2 Meadville; Rhonda Van Ord, daughter of Robert Van Ord of Russell and Kelly Winkleman, daughter of Mr. & Mrs. Fred Winkleman of Waterford. Queen coordinator Susan McClellan explained the program.

Outgoing NW Lamb and Wool Queen Betty Lou Miller shared her reign through her well prepared scrapbook. Blaine Schlosser, county extension director, presented a certificate of appreciation to the association for their contribution to the Extension Service. This was used for the National Association of County Agents convention when it was hosted by Pennsylvania.

The final business of the evening was election of directors. New bylaws have enacted staggered terms, therefore three elections took place. The new directors are: Steve Sandle, John Nordin, Jack McMillen and Vern Johnson (three year term); Richard Burlingame, Ed Trask, Terry Allen and William Wasielewski (two year term); and Pat Bender, John Burnham, Marge Foreman and Ed Burkett will serve one year terms.

Lawrence Co. Schedules Wool Pool

ENON VALLEY — The Lawrence County Co-operative Wool Growers, Inc. have announced that their annual Wool Pool will be held June 3 and 4 at the Lawrence County Fairgrounds, located on Rt. 108, east of New Castle. The board of directors suggests that producers in Pennsylvania counties other than Lawrence, bring their wool on June 3, and producers from Ohio and Lawrence County bring their wool June 4.

As before, spinners and weavers will be welcome to make retail purchases of unscoured wool. Linda Mosley, an instructor of spinning and weaving, and a member of the Youngstown Area Weavers Guild and the Mercer County Spinners and Weavers Guild, will be available from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. each day to help handspinners and weavers in their selection of wool.

For more information, contact William Fullerton at 412-667-7810.

Wool Pool Slated In Wayne Co.

HONESDALE — The annual Wayne County Wool Pool will be held Wednesday, June 18, 8 a.m.-12 noon at Frank Machek's barn located three miles east of Pleasant Mount at the intersections of routes 371 and 247.

The wool has been purchased by the Banbury Wool Company, Danville, Ohio. Prices are as follows: 3/8-¼ staple, .7010; 3/8-¼ clothing, .6710; Low ¼, .6610; ½ staple, .7510; Fine staple, .7710; Fine & ½ clothing, .7410; Fine & ½ rejects, .7210; 3/8-¼ rejects, .6510; natural colored (black), .4610 and tags, .10.

Anyone who has wool is welcome to market it through the Wayne County Wool Pool which is sponsored by the Wayne County Sheep and Wool Growers Association. A small charge is deducted to cover the cost of operating the pool.

New Jersey Meat Packer Ordered To Pay $20,000 Penalty

WASHINGTON — An administrative law judge has ordered Linden Packing Co., Inc., Newark, N.J., to pay a $20,000 civil penalty after finding that the firm used incorrect tare settings on its buying scale for livestock carcasses and paid sellers on the basis of false weights. The firm buys cows for slaughter in New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New York and Maryland.

Administrative Law Judge Victor W. Palmer, U.S. Department of Agriculture, ordered the penalty, plus a cease and desist order, based on testimony at a hearing in Newark on Dec. 3-4, 1985.

Employees from USDA's Packers and Stockyards Administration testified that three separate investigations showed the firm was deducting a 20-pound tare on its buying scale, although the average weight of its hooks and rollers was 14 pounds, 11 ounces.

They testified that a plant officer said the additional five pounds were being deducted to compensate for water on the carcasses, that he was advised this was an illegal practice, and that he promised to stop.

Judge Palmer said the evidence showed, however, that the plant continued the practice, and that from Sept. 27, 1983, through Dec. 29, 1983, it paid a single livestock seller $6,751 less than he should have received, based on the extra five pounds deducted from 1,701 livestock carcasses.

Judge Palmer said the $20,000 civil penalty was warranted by Linden Packing's willful violations after it persisted in adding five pounds to the tare after receiving express official warnings, and promising to stop the practice.

Judge Palmer said the penalty will not affect the firm's ability to continue in business.

The cease and desist order, similar to a permanent injunction, was issued to insure future compliance with the Packers and Stockyards (P&S) Act.

—Last weekend was sweet potato planting time at the farm of Paul Barley, R1 Millersville. He is planting 3½ acres of sweet potatoes this year.

—Dairy month in America's dairy land will get off to a spectacular start when more than 2,000 of the nation's top dairymen get together at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, June 6 and 7 for the 71st Annual Convention of the Holstein Freschian Association of America.

—Although many Lancaster County tomato producers reported extensive losses in their plantings through unseasonal frosts late last week, most have been replanted and there will be more of a time loss than an acreage loss, the County Agricultural Agents Office Advises today.

—Ground was broken Thursday afternoon for construction of the new Lancaster Poultry Center. Construction will get underway immediately and continue to support to raise the necessary $30,000 is urged. Volunteer labor will be used as extensively as possible in construction of the new building at the intersection of Roseville Road and Bypass 230 north of Lancaster.

Experts Talk Turkey, Chicken at Wolgemuth Meeting

INTERCOURSE — Guest speaker Don Simon of Rocco Enterprises gave credit where credit was due at Wolgemuth Bros Inc.'s Florin Appreciation Poultry Dinner on May 22.

"We happen to be in the middle of the 'white meat revolution,' " Simon said, noting that the popularity of white meat poultry products has been largely due to the public's negative perception of red meat.

Defining further processed products as "anything but the whole bird," Simon pointed out that virtually all of the highly successful further processed poultry products have been developed by the marketers of fast foods, rather than the poultry industry itself. McDonald's McNugget, alone, enabled the chicken industry to grow by 25 percent, he said. "It's been our customers who have created the products to make it happen," Simon emphasized.

On the other hand, turkeys have made almost no impact on the fast food industry, Simon continued. Turkey's have been more successful competing with red meat for the household food dollars.

The poultry industry's success both at home and at the fast food restaurant, however, does not mean that poultrymen can afford to rest on their laurels. "We must be concerned about the dark meat in turkeys and chickens," said Simon, emphasizing that, from the consumer's standpoint, any red or dark meat is considered to be of lower nutritional value. Thus far, he said, the industry has combatted the relatively poor demand for dark meat by selling it either in ground meat form or as chicken parts at bargain basement prices.

"We need some new ideas," Simon concluded, challenging the industry to take some of the responsibility for research and development upon themselves. The Rocco official predicted "a couple of good years" for the poultry industry, followed by leaner times. "Somehow we're going to learn how to overexpand," he said.

Simon was one of three featured speakers on the program that attracted 290 of Wolgemuth's customers and other poultry industry leaders. Adams County Extension agent, Bill Murray, took the podium to discuss air quality problems and urge farmers to tighten their biosecurity in the wake of the latest avian influenza outbreak.

Also on the program was Ciba-Geigy representative, Jim Clark, who addressed the problem of fly control. "Don't let your flies manage you," said Clark, adding that no chemical has yet been bottled that can substitute for conscientious management.

In order to slow fly resistence to any one product, Clark recommended that poultrymen use a broad spectrum of products, from larvacides to "knock-down" products that kill the adult insects.

The meeting also gave Wolgemuth Bros the opportunity to recognize those customers posting superior production records. Four turkey, two pullet and two egg production awards were presented in the following categories:

Hen Turkey Performance — Richard Frank, Elizabethtown, 2.33 feed conversion.

Hen Turkey Performance— Leroy Zimmerman, East Earl, best weight for age, 19.13 lbs. at 16 weeks.

Tom Turkey Performance — Leroy Zimmerman, 2.6 feed conversion.

Tom Turkey Performance — Leroy Zimmerman, best weight for age, 31.18 lbs. at 18 weeks, 2 days.

Pullet Performance — Richard Leininger, Stevens, 97.5 percent livability.

Pullet Performance — Guy Wanner, Narvon, 14.89 feed conversion fed to 21 weeks.

Egg Production— Norman and Sue Voortman, Mertztown, 256.9 eggs per hen housed (323 days).

Egg Production — Norman and Sue Voortman, 3.20 lbs. feed per dozen eggs.

Ford Delivers Experimental Ethanol Powered Tractors

URBANA, Ill. — Ford Tractor Operations recently delivered a fleet of new Ford tractors, powered 100 percent by ethanol, for use on an experimental basis to maintain the State of Illinois' roads and highways.

John Chuchman, marketing manager of Ford Tractor Operations' North American Sales Operations, presented four ethanol-powered tractors to Illinois officials during ceremonies at Roland Machinery Company, a Ford Tractor dealership here. Four more ethanol-powered tractors were delivered to the state by Hennessey-Forrestal Ford Tractor in Springfield, Ill. A ninth unit will be used for field work by the University of Illinois Agriculture Department.

The tractors are 4810 models, derivatives of the popular 4610 model in the new Ford II agricultural tractor lineup.

Ford Motor Company's Tractor Operations began producing ethanol-powered units in Brazil in 1979 on a test basis. After more than 40,000 hours of successful field testing, Ford started mass-producing the 4810 models there in August, 1985.

The nine tractors for Illinois were manufactured at Ford's Romeo, Mich., assembly plant, using the 4610 model chassis and ethanol engine components from Brazil. Ford currently has no plans to mass-produce or sell ethanol-fueled tractors to farmers in North America.

Each of the tractors for Illinois has a three-cylinder engine, electronic ignition and a gasoline cold-starting system. Ford Tractor engineers point out that an ethanol tractor achieves better horsepower than similar diesel models — from 52 power takeoff (PTO) horsepower on the 4610 model to 54 PTO hp on the 4810 model.

"We are very pleased that the State of Illinois is the first purchaser of a fleet of our ethanol-powered tractors," said Mr. Chuchman. We look forward to working with officials of the Illinois Departments of Transportation and Agriculture, as well as the University of Illinois, on this project.

"We also welcome the support of the members of the Illinois Corn Growers Association. In view of the fact that corn is used to produce ethanol, the Corn Growers Association plays an integral role in the project."

'Terrain Tracer' Saves Crops, Speeds Harvest

NEW HOLLAND — New Holland's Terrain Tracer lateral-float combine header system cuts looses and speeds harvest. The lateral float lets the header tilt from side-to-side to follow irregular ground contours automatically.

For example, if a standard combine is fitted with a 20-foot platform and one of the combine's front wheels is raised two inches to go over a bump, that end of the header will raise about four inches. On the other side it will dip two inches and probably dig into the ground. With a conventional floating header the control system would raise the low end of the header to keep it from digging in.

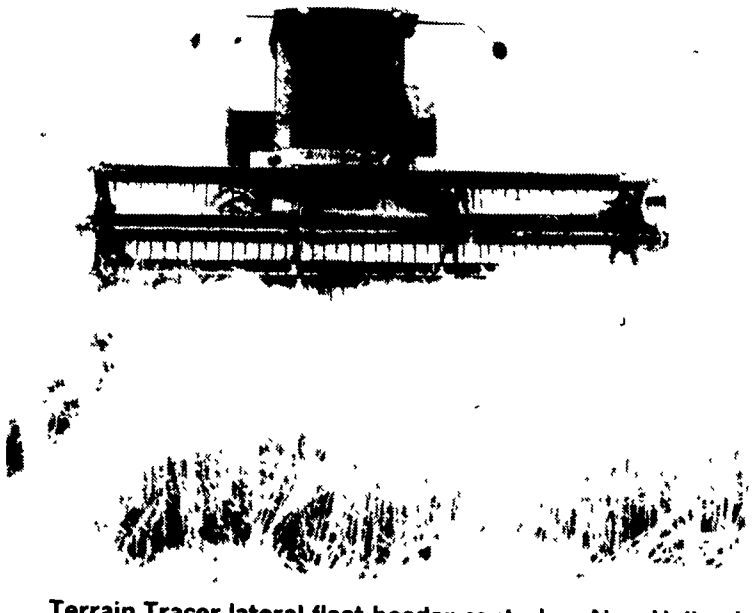
But with New Holland's Terrain Tracer float system, the header will respond independently of the combine chassis to keep the sickle parallel to the ground.

This offers harvesting advantages in a variety of crops and harvesting conditions. In muddy fields, one wheel often sinks deeper than the other. Here the lateral-float control responds quickly to maintain a close, even cut without putting one end into the dirt and lifting the other above the crop.

On irrigation borders it is easier to harvest all the crop and crop losses in down-crop conditions are reduced. Machine stress is reduced when the combine crosses wash-outs and ditches. Because the header can float, or rotate, side to side to follow the ground contour, the sickle can be kept low but just above the surface so fewer stones are picked up.

The automatic, lateral float is especially useful for soybeans because many pods are just above the ground and would be lost with a standard header.

The automatic lateral-float control can be over-ridden by the operator. When row crop heads are used to harvest corn the side-to-side header rotation is manually controlled so wide corn heads can harvest ears at a uniform height even where the land is uneven or fields are ridged. As with direct-cut grain and bean crops, header losses are reduced and ground speeds can usually increase. Operator fatigue is reduced, too.



Terrain Tracer lateral float header control on New Holland combines keeps the header parallel to the ground.

Foraging Around

By Dr. John E. Baylor
Director of Market Development
Beachley-Hardy Seed Company

Annual Forages: Is This the Year?

After an exceedingly dry spring most areas of the Northeast recently received soaking rains. And while these rains are extremely beneficial for all crops (unless you had hay lying in the swath or windrow), in many areas first cutting yields of perennial hay crop and both grain and straw yields of winter grains have already been hurt.

Thus, you may want to take a moment now to assess your 1986-87 feed needs. And if there's a chance you'll be short you can still plug annual forage crops into your 1986 cropping plans. These warm weather annual crops are normally not suitable for hay, but among the annuals there are crops that make it excellent supplemental pasture, green chop or silage. And they are heat tolerant and very productive when moisture and fertility are adequate.

Here's a brief run-down of your choices:

Sudangrasses have finer stems and are usually higher in digestibility than the sorghum-sudangrass hybrids, but they are usually lower yielding. Piper Sudangrass, the most widely grown variety, is also the lowest in prussic acid potential, and is normally used for pasture. Hybrid sudangrasses, such as Beachley-Hardy's Monarch, produce somewhat more forage than Piper but also may have a slightly greater prussic acid potential. However, this difference is small and with good management the sudangrass hybrids are excellent for summer pasture as well as green chop and silage.

Sorghum- sudangrass hybrids such as RS II are usually much higher yielding than Piper and are used mostly in a green chop or silage situation. They do have a higher prussic acid potential and must be managed more carefully during the summer and fall.

These multi-harvest, warm-season annual grasses can be planted right now and will usually be ready for grazing or green chop about six to seven weeks after sowing. They can be no-till seeded in stubble or sod or drill planted on a prepared seedbed. In general, seeding rates of 30-35 pounds/acre for the sudangrasses or 35-45 pounds/acre for the sorghum-sudan hybrids are adequate.

Piper sudan can be grazed when it reaches a height of 18 inches (two feet is recommended for sudangrass hybrids) and if properly fertilized and managed these can be grazed two or three times during the growing season. The sorghum-sudan hybrids should reach a height of 2½ to three feet before grazing or chopping. At earlier stages the forage will be higher in quality but may contain excessive levels of prussic acid. If cut at a stubble height of five to six inches they will recover rapidly for a second crop.

Japanese millet is occasionally grown as an annual forage on the cold, poorly drained soils of northern Pennsylvania and New York while Pearl millet may be used in the lower mid-Atlantic regions. However, these are generally considered inferior to the sudangrasses where the sudangrasses can be grown.

Brassica Crops - Another Alternative

During the past several years brassica crops (rape, kale, turnips, and swedes) have gained in popularity as supplemental summer grazing crops especially for sheep and beef, but also in some cases for dairy cows. A few farmers have also been successful ensiling rape, especially in plastic bags. Because of the succulent nature of rape, wilting before ensiling is an absolute must.

Rape and kale are leafy brassicas, while turnips and swedes are root crops with all parts (leaves, stems and roots) utilized by grazing animals. Rape and turnips reach their maximum yields (up to four tons dry matter/acres) between 90 and 120 days after planting. Thus, rape sown right now would be ready for grazing or chopping by early to mid-September and would be available for a second grazing in late fall. And unlike perennial forages, the quality of rape forage doesn't seem to decline with age.

While there are several rape varieties available, Rangi appears to be the most productive and popular.

Swedes and kale require 150 to 180 days to reach maximum yields, up to six tons dry matter per acre. Plantings can be made in July for late fall grazing.

Brassica crops can be seeded on a prepared seedbed. But seeds are small, seeding rates are low (1½ to four pounds per acre depending on species) and seeding depth is critical. Thus, a good, firm seedbed as well as properly calibrated drills or seeders are a must. Excellent stands of brassicas have consistently been gotten with no-till seedings either in sod or stubble – with herbicides to suppress existing vegetation, a sound lime and fertility program including adequate nitrogen, and the use of new precision no-till drills to do the seeding. And pasture late into the fall has made those crops promising.

One caution: Seed of all of the above named crops is or can be made available. However, make your seed needs known early so your supplier can be sure to have your seed on hand.

Brockett's Ag Advice

By John E. Brockett
Farm Management Agent
Lewistown Extension Office

Dealing With the Spring Rush

Down on the farm, spring is the busiest time of the year. There is never enough time to get everything done. At times, farmers find it hard to even enjoy the newness of spring with flowers blooming, green grass becoming greener, and the fresh smell of newly worked ground. For most farm families, this is the season of planting and harvest time combined. This year most crops were planted on time due to an unseasonally dry early spring. Then came the worry that the seed would never sprout or if it did the small plant would dry up and die, because we needed rain. Now much of Pennsylvania has received that welcome rain and crops are on "GO."

All worries are past — but wait a minute, there is a rapidly maturing hay crop out there. It needs to be harvested now. Now we need a few warm sunny days such as we had a few weeks ago. That is one of the risks in farming in Pennsylvania, weather is always a factor.

Some farmers seem to be able to work with the weather. Other farmers seem to fight the weather all of the time. Still others resign themselves to the fact that whatever they do will be at odds with the prevailing weather. You know hay is mowed so it rains for five straight days or the weather report says rain for three days, so hay is not mowed and it does not rain until the sixth day. And what happened on the sixth day? That is right, hay was mowed. Those who seem to have the best "luck" with the weather are the ones who plant and harvest when it is time regardless of the weather. They take a chance and occasionally lose, but they also win some.

Beating the Weather

People can never really beat the weather. However, a good manager may be able to plan things so he wins a few battles. One way to do this is to plan on putting the first cutting in the silo. That cuts out one or two days of drying time. It also may help get the hay stand off to a good start for the second and third crop, since the sooner the first cutting is taken off, the sooner the next crop will start to grow.

A second way to be a winner is to monitor weather reports and cut hay crops whenever it appears that the weather patterns call for two or more days of sunny weather. A rain on newly mowed hay will not hurt much.

A third way is to use a preservative program with your hay, thus having less exposure time for rain damage. In the past two years grass has matured sooner than alfalfa. Thus, farmers should probably be harvesting first cutting hay crops based on grass maturity rather than alfalfa maturity.

Of course anyone who is interested in winning has all equipment on "instant ready." It is ready to go now if conditions are right. All moving parts should be well lubricated. All of these items that needed replacement from last year should have been replaced. The proper head should be on the chopper. Wagons should be cleaned out and equipped with new or repaired or usable tires. It does not hurt to give it a tryout ahead of time. Perhaps cutting some green chop will show up a loose bolt or a cracked gear or a broken knife or a bad tire.

Safety First

The only really bad thing about spring is that there seems to be a tendency to forget about safety. Everyone is in a hurry to get all of the work done, which too often means cutting corners. Cutting corners may mean hauling too large a load down the big hill, allowing a young child to drive the equipment, driving too fast for conditions, putting in hay that is too green, or any number of things that could result in loss. "Loss" means lost time, lost equipment, lost people parts, lost feed quality, or a lost barn.

Sometimes it appears as though we do not need as many farmers as we have, but losing a farmer due to an accident is not the way to solve over production problems. Farm people have too much to offer the country — whether they are still farming or have been forced to take another job — to be lost through injury. My plea to you is to be careful and practice good safety rules.

Brook Lawn Tops State in NCGA Contest

LANCASTER – Brook Lawn Farm, Lancaster, won first-place state honors in the irrigated division of the 1985 National Corn Growers Association yield contest. James Erb achieved his winning yield of 159.47 bushels per acre with DK656 from Dekalb-Pfizer Genetics.

The prize-winning field was planted on April 22 at a seeding rate of 27,000 seeds per acre in 32-inch row spacings. Erb harvested the crop on October 8 with a moisture content of 24.44 percent.

"I liked the general health of the plant," he says. "DK656 also has good emergence and good seedling vigor."

Erb, who farms with his father, Roy, has been farming for 12 years. In addition to growing 135 acres of corn, Erb and his father raise 50 acres of sweet corn, 10 acres of peaches, pears and nectarines and two and one-half acres of strawberries. Most of the produce they grow on their farm is sold at their retail roadside market.

The National Corn Growers Association, sponsor of the yield contest, is a 17-state commodity organization that is actively involved in corn production and corn market development.

Check With Us For The Bale Chopper You Need For Commercial And Agricultural Uses

THE BALE CHOPPER IS THE GOOSSEN SOLUTION FOR LANDSCAPE, NURSERY AND BERRY MULCHING

Nursery
The Bale Chopper chops then blows straw around trees, bushes, on bedding areas or any place where you need mulch. Apply mulch with the 30' flexible hose; hand held as shown at right.

Residential & Commercial Landscaping
The Bale Chopper evenly applies straw over large areas, and is easy to use around trees, behind bushes, or in any hard to reach spot. And it takes the Bale Chopper less than a minute to thoroughly shred and distribute an entire bale, so even large mulching jobs are completed quickly.

Berry Farming
The Bale Chopper is ideal for mulching strawberries or any row crop.

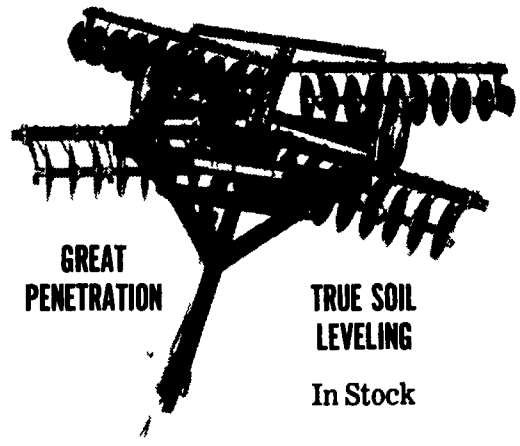
THE MILLER DISC

It Explodes Your Soil!

Series V Rigid Tandem

11'1" Cutting Width, Cushion Flex System, 34 Blades

ONLY
$4,950



GREAT PENETRATION

TRUE SOIL LEVELING

In Stock

Miller Exclusives:

- Controlled Penetration
  Disc penetration is directly related to weight and blade angle. Miller discs have high weight per foot of cutting width. Blade angle on offsets ranges up to 26°. Instead of a fixed gang angle, this weight-angle feature allows increased penetration...with ready adjustment to seedbed preparation to avoid repeat trips across the field.
- Reduced Compaction
  The unique blade angles on Miller discs allow blades to enter the soil parallel to the frame to help avoid soil compaction.
- Exclusive blade design
  Blades are custom manufactured to Miller specifications. Concavity of front blades is less for maximum slicing action; greater curvature on rear throws soil more vigorously. Matched front-rear blade design increases capacity of machine, adds greatly to performance and residue incorporating capability.
- Round Shafts For Strength
  Gang shaft sizes are upscaled in Miller discs...and all shafts are round. This round shape flexes and absorbs more shock than comparable square shafts.

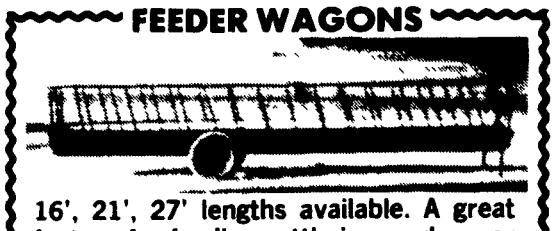
FEEDER WAGONS



16', 21', 27' lengths available. A great feature for feeding cattle in meadows or in feed lots. Can be used for feeding round bales.
If old gas tanks are used for feeder wagon bottoms, they should be sand blasted. If not, the gas and rust may result in sick cattle or even death. Be safe and buy from us as ours are sand blasted before being painted.

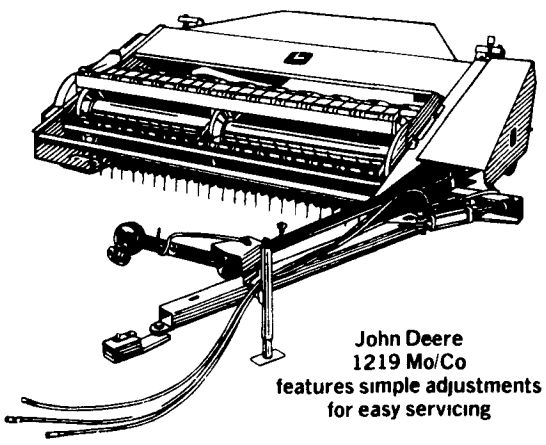
EASY ADJUSTMENTS



John Deere 1219 Mo/Co features simple adjustments for easy servicing

Different hay crops have varying conditioning requirements That's why John Deere's 1219 Mower/Conditioner gives you the option of changing roll spacing and pressure in just a few minutes

When crop conditions call for it simply change the roll spacing to as wide or as narrow as you want When more or less pressure is needed just turn the adjusting bolt

Easy to adjust windrow forming shields let you build the type of windrow you want See the 9 foot 1219 Mo/Co that adapts to your haying conditions

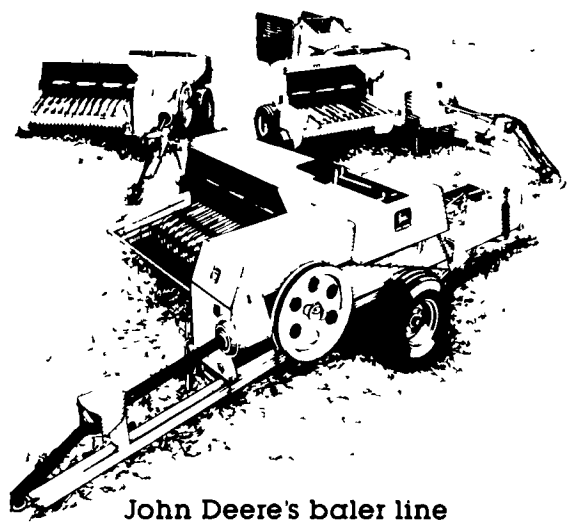
SQUARER BALES



John Deere's baler line builds squarer, stackable bales

To build solid, square-cornered bales consistently, you need consistent control of the hay And John Deere's 327, 337 and 347 Balers give that control from the moment hay touches the pickup

A wide pickup with extra teeth lets these balers take in all the hay in today's wider windrows There's even a compressor to keep the hay under control.

A floating tapered auger and adjustable feeder forks take over to keep material flowing evenly. The gear-driven knotter puts the finishing touch on these solid, stackable bales from John Deere

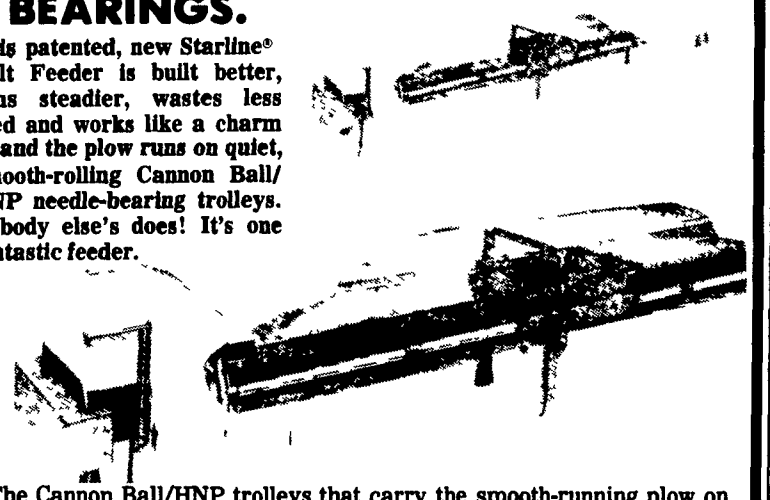
IT'S ALL IN THE BEARINGS.

This patented, new Starline® Belt Feeder is built better, runs steadier, wastes less feed and works like a charm — and the plow runs on quiet, smooth-rolling Cannon Ball/ HNP needle-bearing trolleys. Nobody else's does! It's one fantastic feeder.



The Cannon Ball/HNP trolleys that carry the smooth-running plow on this belt feeder, run in enclosed tracks. That means much less chance of weather problems and premature wear. The solid-state instant-reverse motor provides strong, steady power through a figure-eight cable drive for positive action, protected by a slip-clutch. All control circuits are low-voltage for maximum safety. The feed is distributed equally on both sides of the bunk. Feeder cover is protected by heavy 2"x6" plank running the length of the feeder. The drive cable runs on packed ball bearings with grooved cleaners and cable wipers at all critical points. The cable is coated for maximum wear and corrosion protection.

Ask your Starline dealer for a demonstration soon. You'll find this new feeder is hard to beat.

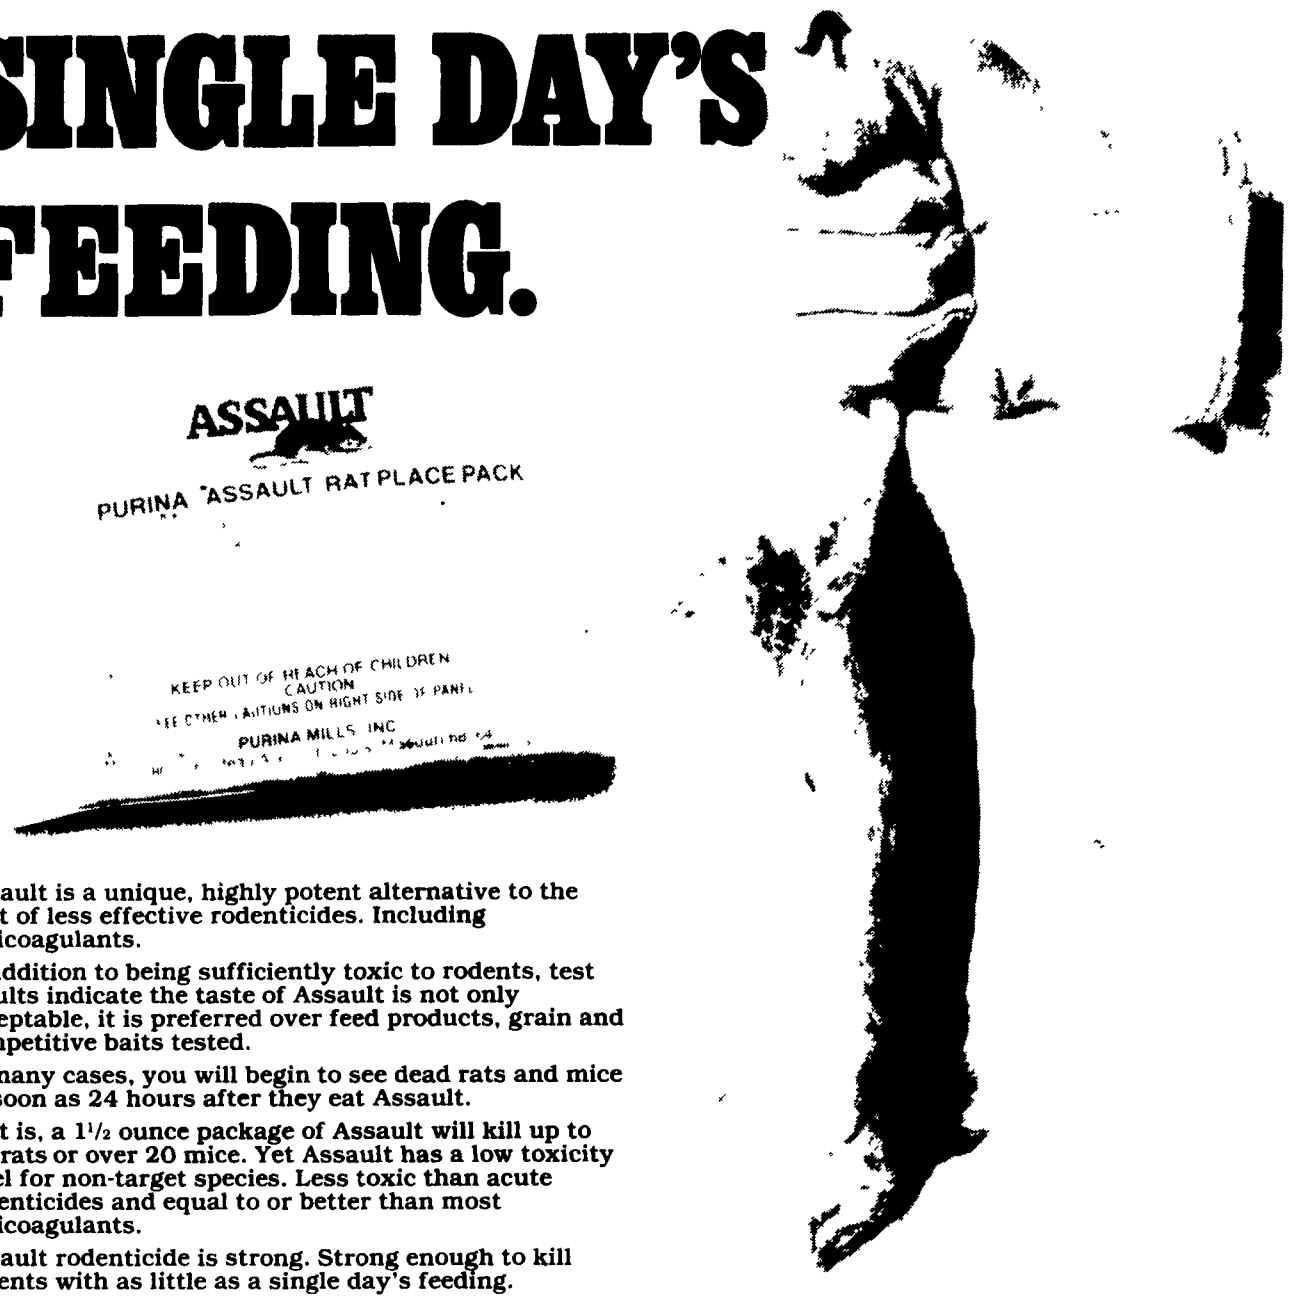
Introducing

ASSAULT

KILLS WITH A SINGLE DAY'S FEEDING.



Assault is a unique, highly potent alternative to the host of less effective rodenticides. Including anticoagulants.

In addition to being sufficiently toxic to rodents, test results indicate the taste of Assault is not only acceptable, it is preferred over feed products, grain and competitive baits tested.

In many cases, you will begin to see dead rats and mice as soon as 24 hours after they eat Assault.

Fact is, a 1½ ounce package of Assault will kill up to six rats or over 20 mice. Yet Assault has a low toxicity level for non-target species. Less toxic than acute rodenticides and equal to or better than most anticoagulants.

Assault rodenticide is strong. Strong enough to kill rodents with as little as a single day's feeding.
